THREE POUND BROTHERS AND FRYSERS BEST.
WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—Housewives who wish to help relieve the meat situation will buy three-pound brothers and fryers and refuse to use "squab chickens" weighing a pound, one-half or less, says the domestic poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The serving of underdeveloped or squab chickens in hotels, restaurants and homes, they regard as unhygienic because such chickens, if kept for four weeks longer, including two weeks of crate feeding, will weigh about three pounds. Moreover, under proper feeding, the chicken makes the extra flesh largely from such by-products not ordinarily used for human food, as buttermilk, sour milk, skim milk, and low-grade grains.

A three-pound brother or fryer, of one of the utility breeds, the specialists say, reaches this weight with a relatively less consumption of feed than the chicken which has been kept until it weighs four or five pounds. Up to three pounds, moreover, chickens of utility breeds make their flesh most effectively from feed. Above three pounds, every pound of grain requires for its production about twice as much feed. This makes plain why the three-pounders always have been the favored bird in Europe where both grain and meat have been less plentiful than in the United States.

In the past, the demand in Europe has led to a "heavy" exportation of three-pound chickens. Such exports having ceased, these three-pound chickens are now available for home consumption, a matter in which the public is to be congratulated.

For feeding, of course, the old hens weighing up to five or six pounds are economical. As these chickens have been fed and kept primarily to lay eggs, use of their meat when their
