Daily Chats With the Housewife

The question of barley as a substitute flour is answered in the following recipes which have been obtained after their successful use in Pendleton homes. Tested war-time recipes or information on the use of substitutes will be gladly received by the East Oregonian and published for the mutual convenience of readers.

The following suggestions regarding substitutes are made by H. G. Blydenstein: Flour substitutes for yeast bread will be better if scalded before mixing. Potato flour especially should be scalded with boiling milk or water and if possible let stand over night. Potato flour, though high priced, goes farther on account of the high absorption, taking as much as 500 per cent water. It gives a better color than most substitutes.

C-cup, T-tablespoon, t-teaspoon.

Barley-Rye Muffins. 2c barley flour, 1 c rye flour, 1 t salt, 1 T fat, 2 t baking powder.

Bake in hot oven in oiled gem tins.

Barley Biscuits. 3 c barley flour, 2-4 c liquid.

2 t baking powder, 2 T fat. Make sure as baking powder biscuits.

Barley Light Bread. 2 c rye or graham flour, 2 c barley flour, 1 T sugar, 1 t salt, 1 T fat, 1 compressed yeast cake, 1 c liquid.

Dissolve yeastcake in lukewarm water and add to warm liquid and salt, sugar, fat and sifted flour. Beat and knead thoroughly to a stiff dough (not as stiff as white dough). Let rise until light (always keep it the same temperature). When light mold and put into an oiled pan and let rise again, when light bake 20 minutes in moderate oven. This makes 1 loaf of bread.

Barley Dumplings. 1 c white flour, 1 c barley, 4 t baking powder, 1 t salt.

Enough liquid to make a soft biscuit dough. Drop from a spoon into boiling liquid and ball slowly for 15 minutes before lifting the lid. Cold air causes dumplings to be heavy.

In Pastries. Barley can be used in pie crust about 1 cup to 3 of white, also in dark cakes and cookies of all kinds.

BADGER BURROWS UNDER ECHO STORE

(East Oregonian Special.) ECHO, April 20.—From sounds emitting from the basement of the George & Miller Co. store yesterday afternoon it was thought the battle front had been transferred from France to Echo, but it developed that it was a doughty badger who had entrenched himself back of the wall of the basement and defied the wiles of man to remove him.
