Pastime Sunday-Monday.

In "The Studio Girl," Constance Talmadge's Select Star Series picture to be shown at the Pastime theater Sunday and Monday, she clinches even more securely the high favor she has won in the hearts of America's film audiences by her delineation of a captivating, if capricious, girl. This picture was directed by Charles Giblyn from Paul West's adaptation of "La Gamine," by Pierre Vexler and Henri de Gorsae.

Celia Laird runs away from her home in Cliff Haven, a tiny New England village, and a loveless marriage with Obediah Law, a deplorable lout but the village "catch," by hiding in the tonneau of Fraser Ordway's car, as he motors back from a vacation in her home town to his New York studio. He puts her on a train supposedly bound for Cliff Haven, but when he gets to his apartment that evening, he finds her asleep in his armchair. Unwittingly, she aids him get out of his engagement with another girl and together they elude the warrant sworn out against him by the Cliff Haven constabulary for abduction. Indignation and rage change to delight, and happiness reigns supreme.

"THE TIGER MAN" NEW W. S. HART PHOTOPLAY

Thrilling Story of the Desert to Be Shown at Arcade Theater Sunday-Monday.

In the portrayal of western characters of a distinct and virile type, William S. Hart is, perhaps, the best known in the cinema world. Mr. Hart has a new picture, "The Tiger Man," directed by himself, which will be presented at the Arcade theater Sunday.

This is a remarkable story of the west. Hawk Parsons, a bandit chief, widely known as "The Tiger Man," lurks on the borders of a desert in search of prey. A wagon train is halted, owing to the lack of water, and the emigrants suffer great privations. Among these is Ruth Ingram, wife of a minister of the gospel, who volunteers to go in search of aid. She encounters Hawk, "The Tiger Man," who after hearing her story, goes to the relief of the imperiled emigrants. The party is attacked by Indians and they are driven off under the leadership of Hawk Parsons. Hawk conceives an infatuation for Ruth and he carries her away with him to his cabin in a secret recess in the desert. She attempts to slay herself, then swoons.

This is the beginning of "The Tiger Man's" regeneration. He subsequently escorts her to a settlement where she rejoins her husband and then gives himself up to the officers of the law on condition that they be permitted to hold their religious services unmolested. The picture is one of intense thrill, strong situations and the highest dramatic interest.

NORMAND PLAY SHOWS DEVICE TO STOP WAR

In this age of marvelous machinery it is not as easy as one might think even to indicate a new invention that seems sensation. Yet it was required of Porter Emerson Browne, author of Mabel Normand's new Goldwyn starring vehicle, "Joan of Plattsburg," to describe for his story an invention so tremendous that it would stop the war if it might be put into universal practice.

According to the story of "Joan of Plattsburg," there is a celebrated inventor named Ingleton visiting the officers of the great military concentration camp at Plattsburg, to show them, under instructions from Washington, the operation of a new device which he has just made. This device is sought by a band of spies operating under cover of an orphan asylum in the neighborhood; and the frustration of their efforts by Joan, the orphan of the institution, constitutes the action.

In the world of fiction probably the most famous example of a writer anticipating a great invention is that in which Jules Verne describes the submarine. Others have occurred in the works of H. G. Wells, and in the scientific writings of Camille Flammarion, not to speak of a host of lesser celebrities.

Browne's contribution is what might almost be called "devilishly ingenious." It is a machine projecting a mysterious beam of light which will explode any ammunition upon which it is directed. Thus, all that would be necessary to defeat the enemy would be to turn this light upon them and all their ammunition would blow up automatically, even to the cartridges in the belts encircling their bodies. Their guns would go off in their hands.

This remarkable invention is used in the photoplay for one of its most thrilling situations. A spy is trying to steal the device from the room of the inventor when the guard attacks him. The guard secures a revolver and is about to use it when the device is accidentally turned so that its deadly beam strikes the weapon. The revolver explodes and the guard is wounded. Thus it is that the spy escapes.

Whether or not this photoplay will stir any ambitious inventors to work along the lines indicated by Mr. Browne remains to be seen. In all events the idea is of the kind that should prove genuine inspiration to the mechanical mind; and until it is developed it will remain a brilliant fiction worthy of being substantiated in fact.

day, "The Belgian," The Story of the Play. Victor Morienne, a young Belgian fisherman, loves Jeanne Desiree, Victor dreams of fame as a sculptor, and through the efforts of Father Julian, the village cure, goes to Paris to study.

Berger, the village postmaster, a German spy, tries to force a marriage between himself and Jeanne, intimidating her uncle Leopold, through a gambling debt the latter owes him. Victor, in Paris, meets and becomes infatuated with Countess de Yries, a German secret agent, and forgets Jeanne.

War breaks out. Victor joins the colors. Wounded in defending an attack on the village, his eyesight apparently is destroyed. He is brought to Paris. Jeanne follows and nurses him, but does not disclose her identity to her blind lover.

Thoroughly deceived, Victor thinks only of the countess, and Jeanne, with a breaking heart, is obliged to pen his love letters to her.

Victor recovers. He can see. But Jeanne, in despair, has fled. Exposed, the countess is arrested as a spy.

Disillusioned, Victor learns to his amazement that it was Jeanne who nursed him through his illness. He follows her to Belgium and attempts a reconciliation.

She refuses him, but finally when captured by the Germans as a spy Victor, who has regained his regiment, saves her life and the two are happily reunited.

Never before in the history of the world has a people been so crucified.
