Women of England Long for Airplanes

LONDON, Sept. 4.—Lots of women have been told they are angels, but English women want to make a step in that direction by becoming experts at flying.

The flying temperament is a combination of "qualities" as likely to belong to the female sex as to the male, and many women are asking "Can we or can we not prove useful for air work?"

They are told by mere man that good eyesight and good nerves are essential. Most women have both. And combined with these qualifications women have also the intense desire to do something, and they are now set upon proving how much they could do. Naturally they don't expect to serve on the firing line; but there is a variety of ways in which a woman with a flying temperament could make herself useful.

Airplanes could be used for locating and removing wounded from the field and for carrying certain cases from the clearing stations to hospital—surely a sphere in which a woman would run no risk of becoming unsexed.

English women have no lust for blood. They don't want to kill, but they do want to help their men. The wish is so fervent that it becomes almost an ache. Thus they are already an integral part of the British army. They cannot be excluded from aviation on logical grounds. It is no use putting forward the sentimental argument, because that is all in their favor.

It is a great probability that women will be needed, and they are willing. All they ask is to be trained so that they would be ready should the emergency arise.

Here is a way in which women can help their menfolk, and to want a thing badly enough is to get it!

CRAWL UNDER YOUR CAR TO REPAIR IT? NOT THIS BIRD; HE DOES IT STANDING UP

If Al Schwartz of Newport, Ky., were not post the draft age, Encin would find this man a most valuable automobile mechanic.

Schwartz's skill in repairing automobiles is world wide. His speed on a job when it comes the owner a whole dollar for each hour's time is such that it makes the owner grin with joy, for Al does not waste time getting in default positions to repair out-of-the-way parts of the car.

Schwartz is a contortionist by profession and he finds this a great advantage in repairing automobiles. He does not waste time crawling under a car to examine the under parts. He simply stands on straight, bends over and twists his head up under the car and not as much as bends a knee in doing it.
