ITALIAN WARFARE ENGINEERS SWING OVER HUGE CHAMS

Italy's war is largely a war in the air in the most spectacular sense of the word—not entirely a war of airplanes and dirigibles, but of great armies battling in the clouds and above them. It is this aspect of Italy's task that has made her war pictures the most sensational that have come to us from the other side.

"Italy's Planing Front," the most recent of these, is from several points of view the most thrilling record yet presented. The stupendous obstacles that had to be overcome and the amazing manner in which they were conquered by Italian ingenuity makes the story of the Panama Canal sink into insignificance in comparison. With a background of eternal snow and at an altitude of over 10,000 feet above the sea, these daredevils of the clouds perform before your eyes feats that seem impossible until you see them actually done.

Whole regiments of men moving through the air on cables that look like trail slides through, an ammunition transported with lightning rapidity from peak to peak; engineers swinging in the air at their daily tasks, a chasm 5,000 feet deep yawning below them; men and aircrafts dashing hither and thither in the air like super-birds; avalanches of lead and steel on their death-dealing course toward the enemy—these are but a few of the thrilling episodes in the great film, record of the achievements of Italy's fighting men on the mountain front.
