PUBLIC-SCHOOLS PEACE PROBLEM

HOUSING CAN BE QUICKLY SUPPLIED

Training Teachers, Improving Instruction Worries Educators.

(By United Press.) NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—One of the greatest reconstruction problems facing the nation, now that peace has come, is the problem of bettering public education, according to leading educators here.

The public schools, as well as most private schools and colleges, have suffered severely on account of the war. Many American cities had just formed plans involving large expenditures for education, when the United States entered the war, and the plans have been held in obedience since. Great school construction programs were postponed and will be resumed with many difficulties.

In New York City several million dollars' worth of construction was planned for the public schools, and the money has been available through out the war, but the government would not permit labor and materials to be diverted from war work. Now that the ban is lifted the construction of new public schools will begin, even though materials still are very high. Thousands of children are unable to attend school for a full day because of lack of space.

Similar conditions exist in most other large cities. Surveys show that the greatly under-constructed public school plant is the rule in American cities. The fairly complete plant is a happy exception.

Other Problem Bigger.

But the physical plant is a thing that can be built up with a fair degree of promptness if the people want better facilities and are willing to vote the money. It is the problem of training teachers and improving the educators most of all.

Half the school children in the United States are attending schools taught by untrained or badly trained teachers, according to a commission of educators headed by G. D. Strayer, president National Education association. This commission has completed a study of national educational conditions, and its conclusions are none too flattering to Americans who believe that the fate of a free people rests largely upon the widespread diffusion of sound education among the people. Concerning conditions in the rural and village schools, the commission says:

"For the national government generously to cooperate with the states, first in meeting the emergency which is drawing so many teachers away from the schools, and then in supporting institutions and agencies for the preparation of competent teachers, would be to raise at once the status of the teaching profession and thereby enhance the efficiency of the schools throughout the land. Without encroaching upon the autonomy of the several states, cooperation would recognize in a most effective way the dependence of the nation's welfare upon the public schools and the significance of the teacher's service to the nation's life."

To "rely upon a want ad" is safe in 99 out of 100 "instances" in life.

1920 APPROPRIATIONS LESS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—Government expenditures to next year are officially estimated at $9,089,667,298.67. McGowan transmitted to the house this estimate of appropriations required for various departments of the government during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920. It includes sinking fund requirements and postal savings appropriations. The total is approximately twenty-two billions less than the total 1919 estimates.
