WHY THE HUNS DID NOT GET Nearer PARIS

am from Oregon, I have seen the Round-Up. I have some like them. A New Paris.

It was a very, very different Paris into which I came this time than I found four months ago. Then it was awful dark, nervous and menacing. Now it was ablaze with light, happy and gay Paris. Like for Postum, "There's a reason."

I was passing through Paris on my way to Le Mans as I wrote you from Lille. On leaving Lille we did not take a direct route, but went east to Brussels, then Louvain, following the route of the early part of the war in Belgium. From Louvain we turned south, going to and through the "cockpit" of Europe, Waterloo, where we were over night. The country south of Lille made Louvain and Waterloo is very, very beautiful even after these years of war, for little damage has been done in Belgium, because they paid heavy indemnities to Germany that their country and cities might be left intact. But it is an entirely different story in France.

France is devastated. To see the ruin and devastation is the only way to realize and believe that beings, once considered human, could have done it. My vocabulary utterly fails me when I try to describe it. But, again, it sure made me smile and made my old teeth prickle up her ears and take the hills on high when we came on across Belgium and into France and passed the French army going on into Germany to watch on the Rhine until the bill is paid for all that devastation.

Was in Sedan. From Waterloo we went on south through Charolais, Philippeville, Charleville Sedan, (where the Am. E. F. were). Then we turned west to Rethel, Rheims. The great cathedral at Rheims is as you know, just a shell, simply a shell, not a thing left in it, with great shell holes in the roof and sides. It is remarkable how close No Man's Land comes to Rheims, and how close together the two lines were. They Did Not Pass.

From Rheims we came on through Reims, Chateau Thierry, Belleau Wood, where our marines barred the way of the Huns to Paris and made the words of the French become true. "They shall not pass." They did not pass, but I saw with my own eyes one of the reasons why. It was a little patch of ground on a corner lot and on each cross was an American soldier.

There are many others somewhere in France and these, too, not far away. But I envy the mother who bore the son that fills any of those graves. Does France and will history place those men in the same light? Here is an indication: While in Brussels we chanced to sit down in a picture show, seeing the program indicated, some war pictures. Imagine the tingle our good American blood got when there flashed on the screen a legend like this: "Soldier American Marines who barred the way of the Huns to Paris." Then the Marines came marching past. That's giving credit where it is due. And a good many Belgians that night realized that there was an American or two in the audience. I very nearly forgot myself and came near shouting "Let 'er Buck."

By following these cities you will see that they cover much of the western front, where I had not already been. For I had begun my work last August in the different armies, not far from Ypres, Poperinghe and Kemmel hill. Then came out and went in again over the Hindenburg line between Cambrai and St. Quentin. When we burst through their line the Huns tucked their tails like yellow dogs and came across with a white flag.

At Historic Waterloo. We were over night at Waterloo, and it was sure very interesting to look over that historic battlefield and at the various monuments and positions of the different armies in a great dome. The observer stands in the center and looks at the battle going on about him. It is very real. The artist was certainly well read in Victor Hugo's description of the battle of Waterloo in Les Miserables. But Victor was off in one of his descriptions. After describing a certain piece of slaughter he philosophizes something like this—"And all this that in some future day some peasant might say, 'Monsieur, give me three francs and I will explain to you the plan of the battle of Waterloo.' Victor was too cheap. It cost us five Cent to quere." and he knew we were Americans and easy marks. But it was worth it.

The Americans Pay. We Americans are spotted in most places and the prices are at once raised. In Brussels we paid the equivalent of $4 each for a dinner that could be had for 75 cents in good old U. S. A. This morning in Paris I took a hasty cup of hot chocolate and bread I had noted the price before entering. While I stood at the counter eating a lady came in and got the same. She paid 40 centimes, not quite 10 cents. But I had to put down one franc, which is 20 cents.

We got out of Paris about 10 a. m. It was raining hard and continued so most all day. Yet I drove over 100 miles before dark, taking an hour off for dinner. The roads are very fine in France, even in the war areas, though of course they have not been kept up these last four years as in times past. Yet the national highways and boulevards are mostly good. We came via Versailles, Chartres, Nogent where we are tonight. It is certainly a very beautiful part of France. Though we passed through one section of wooded land with scrubby timber and very thin land not very tillable. The same thing is true down this way as in all France. You drive miles and miles and never see a farm house, yet the fields are all cultivated and you will see people working out in the fields. They live in the towns and villages which are strung out along the roads in northern France. But here in central and western France they are off the main roads at times where their ancestors lived and they still continue in the same place. Why should they "change" their "folk" Very sincerely yours, J. M. CORNELLISON

ROOSEVELT'S DEATH OPENS PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN GOSSIP

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—Theodore Roosevelt's death reopened a man, who in the public mind was regarded as the likeliest republican presidential nominee for the 1920 campaign. Close upon the expression of sorrow following the announcement of his death, capital politicians began discussing the chances of other candidates. General Pershing's name is most heard in the gossip, but two elements of doubt have entered into the consideration of Pershing. First, whether he is the republican choice, and second, whether he would give up his army career to enter politics. Friends and many other prominent republicans now profess to believe their particular candidate has moved to first place in the line of aspirants. Senators Borah and Johnson are both strongly progressive. Hughes, Former Senator Root and Taft, conservative, are among those mentioned.

When nervous, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act normally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, fever, teaspoonful of California Syrup of Figs, and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless "fruit laxative"; they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid. Ask your druggist for a bottle of California Syrup of Figs, which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here.
