Lieutenant Colonel Barrows, who returned on the same ship, told the United Press he believes those reports of conditions are exaggerated to some extent. He said the general condition of the troops remaining in Siberia is good. He sees no prospect of the early withdrawal of American troops from Siberia. Withdrawal from northern Russia would not affect the Siberian situation, he said.

"Trouble Liquidated" Says Philosophic Chief

Chapter two, the concluding installment in the romance of Johnny Severling and George Dagne, Walla Walla youths apprehended here yesterday after running away from home was enacted about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

ernoon. The new characters introduced were the fathers and mothers of the boy and girl and a touring car belonging to the boy's father.

When the parents appeared, the Severlings found Johnny calmly talking in the sights of Pendleton from the office of Sheriff Taylor, while the Dagnes found their daughter in care of the city matron at the city hall. They were all too happy at finding their youngsters safe to be late and forgiveness was quickly forthcoming.

The "fade-out," as the movies would have it, showed a big touring car headed east on Court street, two stern faced dads in front, two weeping mothers in the tonneau seats and their respective errands, also both in tears and shielded by the respective mother's arms, in the jump seats.

"And so, their troubles were liquidated," philosophized Chief Roberts this morning.

You can draw your own conclusion from the fact that there isn't enough truth in existence to keep tongues of gossip constantly wagging.

Sub-zero weather, say the soldiers, are frequent. Charges that the Y. M. C. A. is "profiteering" are also made by the troops. Private Lloyd Gibson told of seeing soldiers who had lost a hand or foot through exposure. He
