BRYAN STRONGLY ENDORSES LEAGUE

that we would have it at once. But just 21 years after it had passed the house six times, it passed the senate for the first time. When it once passed the senate, the states ratified it in a very short time and today you can safely say that nine tenths of all the voters will vote never to return to the old system of electing the senators under the old plan. But it took more than two decades to secure this reform and it is not surprising that there was never a speech made against it that deserved to be reported or quoted and no convention ever declared against it. However, it took that long to get it through.

Income Tax Law.

In 1894 we passed a bill and made it a law providing for an income tax. The Supreme Court held it unconstitutional and did so by a divided vote of 5 to 4 and the one man whose vote decided changed his position on the subject between two hearings of the case. I don't know who that man was and I think his descendant will never let it be known who he was. Seventeen years after that we secured an amendment to the constitution authorizing an income tax and that amendment was secured just in time to enable our country to collect an income tax without which it would have been difficult to raise the money for the war.

I mention these things to show you how long it takes to secure a reform. My father taught me I could afford to be in the minority but not in the wrong of any question. He said if I was in the majority and right it would some day be in the majority but if I were in the majority, and wrong, I would some day be in the minority. He taught me to believe in the omniscience of truth.

He taught me to believe also that it was the duty of a citizen to go to find out what was right and to find it out stand there without stopping and counting to see how many stood with me I believe that more today than I ever did before.

Among the reforms which have finally won out is woman's suffrage. I will not argue it as the time for argument is past. Suffrage is almost here and I predict that in a year we will have seen this ratified by the 36 states necessary.

I have seen women standing by the side of men, sharing their responsibilities in the government, as she has always done, even when she had no voice in the making of the law by which she must abide.

Women's conscience, joined to man's judgment, will triumph in every righteous cause and if women's consciences had been listened to, instead of man's judgment, the saloon would have been banished from the United States long before it was.

Men kept saloons in towns, counties and cities on the theory that it would hurt business if saloons were driven out. They were able to create sentiment that their towns had to be purified of later on.

Now women did not consider whether the town would be benefited or not by a saloon. She believed it would destroy the home and the home was more to the woman than was the city.

Democratic Symptoms. I remember from the time I was a boy, people told me my party was the "whiskey party" and even before I can remember they were saying it. Before the war they told a story of Lincoln and Douglas. As they were going along the street of Springfield one day and saw a drunken man and Lincoln said to Douglas, "There goes one of your Democrats."

Douglas, who knew the man said, "No, he is a Republican. They decided to leave it to the man and Lincoln approached the man and enquired as to his politics and told him how the matter came about, and the man replied that Douglas was right. "I am a Republican, but I have Democratic symptoms."

I have had Republicans tell me to ray face that my party was the whiskey party and it has made me mad for two reasons. First, that any Republican would be mean enough to say such a thing to a man like me, and second, because I could not deny it.

As for the soldier proposition, when I see that these soldiers have shown themselves to be the greatest fighting machines the world ever saw and that they fought with all the strength that was in them, and surprised the world, in being able to go into the fighting with little or no training, and the reason for their being such effective fighters was because alcohol was entirely separated from them, and we found that when we kept the alcohol a way we could reduce to a degree what was called the preventable disease.

Most of us believed that to make a soldier required a long period of training but we had soldiers on the battlefield in less than four months from the time they put on the uniform and we showed that under our process of training and surroundings and in environment that we could put them in physical condition and wit them to be the best soldiers on earth in that period of time.

Now when their work is done over there and they are back, the first duty of the nation is to see that every soldier has a chance to resume the work he left to put on a uniform. If any of them have suffered, so that they cannot work, it is only fair and proper that our nation should be prepared to train them for the kind of work that they are best able to do. I think there should be established a national bureau to provide these men with the work for which they are best fitted. I think it only just that the soldier be given a chance to begin where he left off when he joined the army. I think our good roads furnish an opportunity to secure a great public benefit and at the same time, provide an opportunity for the employment of every idle man. When the auto first came in, and people began to talk of good roads, there was a suspicion that it was class legislation in the interests of the car owners.

I remember for several years after people began to use cars, when I would go into a town, and one of the Democrats would meet me and would explain that no democrat had a machine but a prominent Republican had and had loaned the machine for the occasion. Thus for several years I rode in Republican automobiles. But finally Ford made a car cheap enough for the Democrats and now the car is a common thing. Someone has said that Ford has made walking a luxury, but now we find more autos in the country than in the cities. A large percentage of them are owned by the farmers, than by those living in the cities.

Now my friends I think the time has come when we can utilize any surplus labor in the country in the building of roads and there need be not one idle man under the American flag. Special attention should be given to the returned soldier in the matter of employment and I want to say a word about profiteering. I know nothing of your experience, I am not prepared to say about any particular community so as to make local application of anything, I say. But I know that in the country generally there has been profiteering and the blackest spot on the result of this war is found in the fact that while our soldiers were fighting in Europe, our people were being bled in the United States by profiteering. I come to the theory that there should be a remedy for every wrong, on the theory that whenever the government protects themselves and avenge his own wrongs, the government assumes the obligation of perfecting that citizen from every arm uplifted for his injury. Today I think there is an immediate and imperative demand for machinery that will enable and protect those of our citizens from the profiteers.

I think a national trade commission in every city with ample power to deal with every wrong and every municipality ought to have authority to appoint a trade commission to deal with every local grievance so that if anyone complained that any man in the town, state or nation was profiteering or exploiting those with whom he dealt, a charge could be brought before the proper authority and an investigation made so that if a charge were false, the man accused could be vindicated. If it were true, he could be punished. My belief is that it is the duty of all citizens to see that our government run the protection of every right and the punishment of every wrong. Just now the wrong of profiteering demands our immediate attention.

Having spoken of these things, I wish to call your attention to the greatest of the issues before the nation of a domestic character. If I am correct in my judgment, the greatest domestic issue we have and which will be before us until settled, and settled right, is the issue between private monopoly and government ownership.

Monopolies. In presenting the principles involved I wish to say that we will never settle these questions until we understand the controlling principles. We will never have an intelligent opinion on the question of government ownership until we have an understanding of what a private monopoly is.

We will lay down the proposition of what a private monopoly is. It is indefensible and intolerable because it cannot be defended and intolerable because anything that cannot be defended cannot be tolerated. In a government likewise.

Let me explain. Do you know a judge so good that you would let him try a case if you sued him or he sued you? There is not a civilized nation in the world that would permit a judge to try a case in which he was pecuniarily interested. That is a matter of all understand. Unconscious bias of the man in favor of himself makes the man unfit as a judge where his interests conflict with the interests of others. Thus the president of a monopoly sits in judgment of cases which concern the public at large as well as himself. He cannot help but be prejudiced in favor of his own interests.

Here are objections to the monopoly. One is the economic objection and the other is the political objection. The economic objection is this: A private monopoly destroys every incentive and provocation to complete and the interest of the man who purchases where he can buy the article the cheapest. The buyer wants the cheapest for the least money. It is necessary for the man who produces the article to produce the highest quality at the lowest cost. If you give him a monopoly and take away all competition, that incentive is destroyed and instead of his interest being on the side of the man who buys, he does not have to give you the best article. You have to take what he has to give you. He does not, furthermore, have to give it to you for the lowest price. No, you have to pay what he asks for it. But if you can convince me that under a private monopoly you can get the best article at the lowest price I will be opposed to the private monopoly, for it is disjunctive of the theory of popular government. It cannot live under the same flag as popular government.

There are two explanations to this proposition. First, if a man is head of a private monopoly, when he starts to exercise these powers, he is doing an injustice to others. He becomes conscious that he is gathering where he did not sow and when a man is conscious that he is collecting from the public without giving them a return, he is then the enemy of popular government.

League of Nations. Yesterday the president presented to the senate what is known as the League of Nations. It was part of the treaty which he brought back from Paris.

I believe it should be ratified. Let me give you my reasons for believing this.

I believe that it is the longest step toward peace that the world has taken in 1000 years. If not, it is the longest ever taken by cooperation between nations. The first question to appear at your best—Instantly. If you receive a sudden caller or an unexpected invitation you can feel confident of always appearing at your best. In but a few moments it renders to your skin a wonderfully pure, soft complexion that is beyond comparison.

GAZE ON THE PERFECT PROFILE AS REGISTERED BY SCIENCE AND MADE "THE FOLLIES" STANDARD

Science has been made to serve art in the selection of the beauties for this year's new "Follies." Ziegfeld wanted the heads of his 1919 chorus to conform as nearly as possible to that of Jessie Reed, the "key" beauty for the chorus. The "profilometer," invented by the English scientist, Prof. Huxley, was brought into play. This is composed of sliding rods, adjustable to the contours of the face, and with it may be transferred to paper the profile of a living person. Every girl who applied for a job this year in the "Follies" had her profile taken. If it coincided, with but fractional differences, with that of Miss Reed, the girl was engaged. Ziegfeld believes he has found the 75 most perfectly profiled girls in the United States. The profile of Jessie Reed, and the manner in which it is registered by the machine are here shown.
