bound the contracting parties to submit all questions of the character mentioned to arbitration by The Hague Tribunal. They went further, and provided that questions of difference arising between the parties, not of the character which it was agreed should be submitted to arbitration, should be investigated by a joint high commission, to be constituted in accordance with the provisions of the treaty, and bound the parties not to go to war over such questions until one year after the report of the commission. But the Senate, while voting to ratify these treaties, amended them in certain particulars, and in the resolution of ratification reserved from their operation questions affecting the admission of aliens, the territorial integrity of the several states of the United States, the alleged indebtedness or monetary obligations of any state, and any question which depends upon or involves the maintenance of the traditional attitude of the United States concerning American questions commonly described as the Monroe Doctrine, or other purely governmental policy."

The amendment of the treaties by the Senate, however, prevented their ratification by the President and neither of them became effective.

Byran Treaties
Under the Wilson Administration, Secretary Bryan negotiated a series of treaties, in 1913-1914, with twenty-one different countries, which were ratified by the Senate, without any reservation whatever, whereby the high contracting parties agreed

"that all disputes between them of every nature, whatsoever, which diplomacy shall fail to adjust, shall be submitted for investigation and report to an international commission to be constituted in the manner prescribed" in a designated article of the treaty. They further agreed not to declare war or begin hostilities over any such question during such investigation and report.

Covenant a Logical Step
In view of this history, it is but a conservative step forward now to agree with all the other powers composing the League of Nations to refer to arbitration any justifiable dispute which may arise with any of them, and to submit to the Council for investigation and report any question of a different character, and also not to resort to war until either arbitration or investigation shall have been concluded, and even then, not to make war against a party which shall comply with an arbitral award, or the unanimous recommendation of the Council.

CUPID WINS ARMY PASS

TACOMA, Wash., July 15.—Roland H. Hartley, once candidate for governor of Washington and now a corporal in the Washington national guard, in summer training at Camp Farwell, American Lake, pleaded successfully yesterday for a pass that he might go to his home in Everett to attend the wedding of his son. Corporal Hartley explained to Captain P. W. Paschke that he wanted his son to wait until the guard went out of training, but the youth was just home from France and wanted to wed.

"Very well, you shall have your pass," said Captain Paschke.

Corporal Hartley in civil life bears the honorary title of colonel, as he served in that capacity on the staff of Governor Clough of Minnesota many years ago. Mr. Clough is his father-in-law. The two are now associated in the lumber business at Everett.

WOMEN IN BUSINESS

Woman's power in America is well illustrated by the thousands of women who entered almost every line of business to replace men who were drafted during the war. Health proved their strongest asset. Many women, however, developed weak, nervous conditions and could not stand the strain of a business life. Such women should remember there is one tried and true remedy in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which for forty-five years has been restoring health and strength to the women of America.

Electric Fans

Come in now and get that electric fan. We can only guarantee the present price as long as the stock we now have on hand holds out.

We are now selling the 12-in. G.E. Pullman fan for $15.00, the same price as last year.

This fan will only use about 1/2 cent's worth of electricity per hour. Can you think of a cheaper way of keeping cool?

Today's Letter Takes Up

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

The Hague Convention
The second Hague Conference in 1907 agreed upon a convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes. It established a Permanent Court of Arbitration to sit at The Hague, and it provided that

"in questions of a local nature and especially in the interpretation or application of international conventions, arbitration is recognized as the most effective and at the same time the most equitable means of settling disputes which diplomacy has failed to settle. Consequently, it would be desirable that in disputes about the above mentioned questions the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions."

And further:
"That the United States approves this convention with the understanding that recourse to the permanent court for the settlement of differences can be had only by agreement thereto thru general or special treaties of arbitration heretofore or hereafter concluded between the parties in dispute."

It further declared that the United States exercised the option contained in Article LIII of the convention, which excluded from the Permanent Court the power to frame the submission for arbitration required by general or special treaties concluded, or thereafter to be concluded, by the United States, and that the submission required by any treaty of arbitration to which the United States should be a party must be settled by a special agreement between the parties, unless the treaty should otherwise expressly provide.

Root Treaties

Following the Hague Convention, Secretary Root negotiated a series of separate treaties with different countries, whereby it was agreed—all in substantially the same form—that differences which might arise between the parties of a legal nature, or relating to the interpretation of treaties, which it might not have been possible to settle by diplomacy, should be referred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration which Arbitration established by the Hague Convention provided that they did not effect the vital interests, the independence, or the honor of the two contracting states, and did not concern the interests of third parties. Three treaties further provided that in each individual case the contracting parties should conclude a special agreement defining the matter in dispute which was to be submitted to arbitration, which agreements should be made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Most of these treaties were limited to a period of five years; a number of them have since been extended, and are now in force. The countries with which they were made include among other Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and Norway.

Knox Treaties

During the Taft Administration, Secretary Knox negotiated similar treaties with Brazil, Ecuador and Hungary. He also negotiated treaties with Great Britain and France, which were ratified March 5th, 1912, whereby it was agreed that all differences relating to international matters in which the high contracting parties are concerned, by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other, under treaty or otherwise, and which are justiciable, by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of principles of law or equity, shall be submitted to arbitration at The Hague. These agreements conferred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration which
