RENTAL PROBLEMS

Big in Germany

Influx of War Workers, Slack in Building Causes Situation Like in U. S.

By CARL D. GROAT (United Press Staff Correspondent.)

BERLIN, July 19.—Berlin is facing a serious housing problem. There are insufficient houses and rents are vastly high. Out of this situation is developing a demand that the municipality do something to alleviate conditions, particularly the conditions of the poor. Recently the question became so grave that there were threats among the populace to go on a rent strike—that is, to refuse to pay rent.

While this proposed refusal arose in part from the communistic spirit of the times, it was in part the expression of a long continued dissatisfaction with quarters and with prices. In some of the outlying districts, people live in barracks, and they have long since tired of this mode of existence.

Like U. S. Capital

As for even the well to do the housing situation is difficult. Just as in the American national capital during the war, people advertised frantically for apartments or houses and offered large premiums so are Germans here advertising constantly, with the bait of a large reward for desirable places.

While up to this writing the rent strike proposal has been merely sporadic threats, the question of housing has come up quite strongly of late for government consideration. And one of the answers given in the course of testimony on the subject was that the illicit trade in lumber and building material—just as with the "Schleichhandel" in food—had made prices of building stuffs soar out of reach of ordinary contractors.

Government Housing Talked

In line with development of socialistic proposals here, many persons would like the government to go into the housing business on a large scale but this has not so far come to any material plan.

Berlin's housing deficiency arises both from the fact that there has been a considerable influx of war workers, and from the fact that during the war, it was impossible to attend to normal building requirements. The tendency toward socialization has developed recently into a movement for municipal purchase of the street railway system. At this time, it appears that control will be taken over within a few weeks.

According to the franchise granted

the street railway company, the city has the right to regulate fares; and while it permitted a wartime raise to 17 1/2 pennies, it now has told the company that this cannot be continued. A drop back to the old rate would mean that the company would lose hundreds of thousands of marks annually, and this fact is being used as a club by the city in its program of taking the concern over.
