EXPLORERS HALTED BY WAR HAVE SET OUT

Smithsonian Expedition Largest Since Stanley's Search Through Africa.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—African exploration, halted during five years of war, is to be resumed.

The first expedition since 1914 has just set out from New York. A party of nine, including scientists, motion picture camera men and one newspaper correspondent sailed for Capetown on the Norton Line steamer City of Honors.

It's the Smithsonian African Expedition—the largest in scientific scope since the famous Stanley expedition that went in search of Livingston half a century ago; larger than that headed by the late Col. Theodore Roosevelt after he retired from the presidency in 1909.

Officially it is known as the Smithsonian African Expedition under the direction of Edmund Heller, in conjunction with the Universal Film Manufacturing company.

Six Months The trip, which will last at least six months and penetrate into unexplored parts of darkest Africa, was arranged by Dr. Charles Watcott, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution of Washington, and Carl Leomle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing company, which will be in full charge of taking motion pictures.

Edmund Heller, director of the expedition, is a famous naturalist. He piloted Colonel Roosevelt, and was with Paul Rainey in Africa, and has been on scientific expeditions in Central America, Peru, China, Tibet, Burma, Alaska and Siberia.

Two other noted scientists in the expedition are Henry C. Raven, Smithsonian naturalist, just returned from long exploring trips in Borneo and Ceylon, and Dr. Homer LeRoy Sants, botanist for the United States department of agriculture.

The scientists will collect skulls, skins and bones of animals, specimens of insect life, skulls and bones of human races, live animals and plants and seeds. The special mission of Dr. Sants will be investigations leading to the introduction of useful plants, trees and grain into this country.

Motion Pictures Play Part For the first time in the history of science the motion picture camera will play its part in African exploration. Movies will be brought back to America of known and hitherto unknown forms of animal, insect and reptile life and of races and tribes, many never seen by white men.

Directing all motion pictures for the expedition will be William Stowell of Los Angeles, whose chief photographer is George Scott, of Los Angeles, noted for photographic feats in the South Sea Islands and the far east. Two other camera men in the expedition are Henry Kohler of Chicago, and Philip Horne of Los Angeles. Dr. Joseph R. Armstrong of Los Angeles was chosen by the Universal as physician and business manager.

To Cost $200,000 It is estimated the expedition will cost $200,000. It will cover upwards of 8000 miles from one end of Africa to the other.

Much of the distance will be overland travel. The nine members of the party will head a huge caravan, known in Africa as a "baferi." Negro porters of varied races, marshalled under

ARCADE TODAY

From Theatre Magazine, December Issue.

Do you remember "Cabiria"? Do you remember the giant in "Cabiria," Well, he is with us again—this time in "The Warrior," a picture production far out of the ordinary.

Marvelous Maciote, as he was named in a picture released last year, uses his wonderful strength, this time in a worthy cause.

The settings for the picture have been furnished by the great war—that portion of it showing a bit of the conflict along the frontiers of Italy and Austria.

Maciote and a company of motion picture actors are arrested by an Austrian Cavalry Troop at suspicious characters. They and several hundred other suspected persons are herded like sheep and imprisoned in a barn.

Maciote contrives their escape and from then on the picture is a riot of action. Particularly good are soldiers of Italy scaling cliffs and crossing chasms in full war regalia.

All of these scenes provide Maciote with opportunities of displaying his supernatural strength. The photography and direction are both good. Although "The Warrior" is a delightful and unusual evening's entertainment.

West of Dime Novel Days Provides Setting for New Beatriz Michelena Play

The West of the land of adventure. The thrill of the exciting exploits of our dime-novel reading days, is what we all long for but seldom experience.

"Just Squaw," Beatriz Michelena's new picture, is one of those pulse-quickening melodramas that carry us out to the country where men lived their lives as they pleased, where a law unto themselves, and settled difficulties in a sudden and arbitrary manner.

Fawn, the beautiful girl whom everybody thought "Just Squaw," The Breed, her half-caste brother, Snake Le Gal, the "bad man" of Rogue's Roost, and The Stranger in "Just Squaw," are characters who lived, fought and died, some of them, and did it in their own unconventional and primitive way.

ALTA TODAY ONLY

Select Pictures presents Mitchell Lewis, its new star in "Code of the Yukon," at the Alta theatre today.

"Code of the Yukon" is a story of a French Canadian prospector, Jean Dubois, whose aim in life is to find the man who wronged his sister. A gang of crooks try to steal his mine and they persuade his wife that she is not happy with him. She runs away with one of the band. The leader of the band is Cregan, for whom a woman, who has fallen in love with Jean works. She tells him that Cregan is the man who wronged his sister. Jean attempts to kill Cregan but a Higher Power saves him the trouble. Jean's wife returns to him and things take a brighter turn.

"Headman," will number between 150 and 200.

The explorers will enter the dark continent at Capetown and come out at Mombasa, in British East Africa, after scientific research and motion picture work in the jungles and deserts, the headwaters of the Nile, and the famous "waterhole" country, where there are more wild animals to the square mile than anywhere else on earth.
