The Possibility of Failure

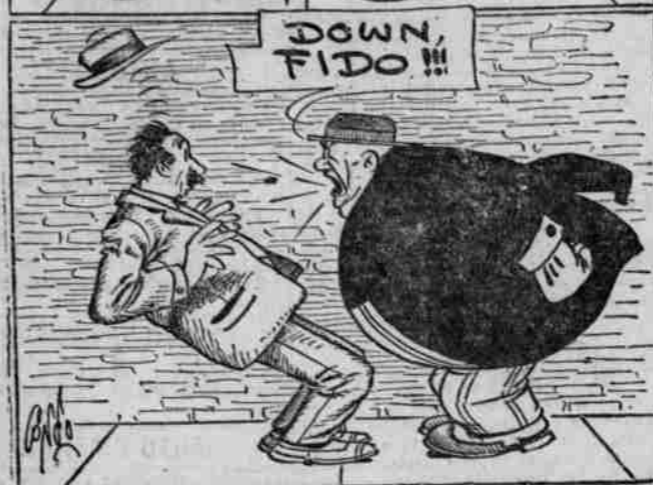

is something every business man and every rancher must take into his calculations. Of course, this does not mean that he expects to fail. It means that he does not intend to fail. During these times when prices are steadily increasing, there is little danger, but if values decline, the real test will come. It is then that those who managed wisely and early connected up with a strong financial institution, will be able to weather difficult times.

SMART LITTLE HATS

Some of the smartest little hats that mark the turn of the year into autumn are constructed of horsehair cloth, dyed in malms, copper, jade and blues. The threads of varying hue are interwoven, and the result is twisted into bands about a striking black turban to companion the soft autumn suit.

28 YEARS AGO

(From the East Oregonian, September 19, 1891.)

The initial "hop" of a series of socials to be given during the winter under the management of Frank Frasier was greatly enjoyed by a number of young people at Wheeler's hall Thursday evening.
Jessie Felling and daughter, Miss Edith Felling, have returned from their visit to the coast.
Leo Moorehouse commences work this morning with the commissioners now allotting Indian land. He will do the surveying for the party.

H. J. Taylor has sold the J. D. Peck quarter section of land about eight miles northeast of Pendleton to Mr. Anderson, a brother-in-law of John Barr. The consideration was $4,000.

Lot Livermore, F. H. Brigham and George Morston leave Pendleton Tuesday next to make the permanent location for the ditch of the Blue Mountain Irrigation and Improvement company, when this is done everything will be in readiness for construction work.

THE NEW BLOUSE

The girl who loves society and busy feminine things will find many occasions when such a combination sketched here will just suit. It's a fetching, broad-brimmed hat of black malfine, with a ruff to match, both wreathed with bands of pink and lavender silk roses, and touched up with black velvet ribbons.
