WEEDS.

"Till some one laughed at me and said, 'They're only weeds, they never live inside a well-kept garden bed.' I thought that they were flowers. I loved my roadside friends before. But since I know they grow where no one cares, I love them more. They are so brave to go where they may choose—just anywhere. That looks a pleasant place to be. There is nothing they're afraid to dare. An' now it's plain to me. That weeds are flowers who ran away because they liked to be quite free. And never grow as people say— They know the world was made to see."

MORE BUILDING WORK NEEDED.

WHEN Pendleton obtains its new theater and the old Oregon playhouse is converted into apartments there will be a two-fold gain for the city. The necessity of the new theater has long been obvious and the demand for living places in the city is even more pressing. We need more work of this sort than is proposed. With all the improvements that can be carried out this winter there will still be a house shortage confronting Pendleton. We are not building as fast as the growth of the city calls for. New families are arriving regularly and every local wedding means a demand for another house or an apartment. The construction of the Collins mill and the enlargement of the woolen mill force will emphasize the need of greater housing accommodations. How is Pendleton going to meet the situation?

TOO MUCH POLITICS.

WHILE President Wilson was busy with work of the utmost importance in connection with the peace treaty he was criticised by opponents in congress for not attending more to domestic business. The shoe is now on the other fellow's foot. The president outlined various constructive domestic measures which he submitted to congress for action. Action thereon is required in order to speed the return to normal conditions. Congress, however, has devoted its time to an effort at making political capital over the treaty and is planning to adjourn without working out any reconstruction program. The executive branch of the government has been willing to take a chance at constructive work regardless of how the political chips may fall. The legislators with an eye on 1920 have been fearful of doing anything and are letting matters ride as they are despite the fact that harm is sure to result from their neglect.

There is need of more statesmanship and less politics at Washington.

USING ARMY SUGAR.

IN THE controversy over the living cost and particularly the sugar shortage the country is now undergoing it has developed that the country might have been in an actual sugar famine several weeks ago, but for the efforts of the war department which has released more than 50,000,000 pounds of sugar for sale to the public during the past few months. As a result the army is now existing on a reserve of less than two and one-half months supply and every soldier from the chief of staff to the buck privates is having his sugar supply rationed. The normal sugar reserve of the army is at least three months' supply and usually six months' supply, but the department has cut this way below normal to meet the civil demands.

Anticipating a possible recurrence this year of a sugar shortage in the early fall at the end of the preserving season, Secretary of War Baker had a special survey of the army supply made early in the summer and determined that about twenty-five thousand tons of the army reserve could be released in an emergency. This sugar was released through the United States Sugar equalization board as the demand for it was felt, in several large lots, in spite of the anxieties expressed by many army officers. Had it not been for these releases from the army's stock to public use it is declared the public would have felt the shortage much sooner and the present shortage would have been considerably more acute than it actually is.

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—Despite efforts of Mayor Hylan to settle the strike of longshoremen here yesterday and last night, the situation appeared this morning even further from solution than when the parleys began.
