SHIRLEY MASON IS A BRAVE STORE GIRL IN "THE FINAL CLOSE-UP"

In "The Final Close-Up," Shirley Mason's new Paramount picture, the star plays the part of a poor little girl who works in a department store. On a terribly hot day, she pretends to faint in order to be relieved. The doctor orders a vacation but little Nora is in a quandary, as she has no money.

But Jimmie Norton, a reporter, had seen her predicament and sends her two hundred dollars without letting her know who sent it. She takes the money, goes to a seaside town and put up at the swellest hotel. But Jimmie also comes to that town and when Emily Westervelt-Moore, a society girl, sees that Jimmie is impressed with little Nora, she is jealous, and on learning from Jimmie that Nora months, again plays opposite. It is a story of the West in the days of '49 when men lived with their guns in the holsters ready for instant use and when intrigue, gambling and fighting were but a part of the daily routine. George Elwood Jenks has written a romance with a new type of Western good-bad man. Kerrigan's role excites sympathy from the start. He may be a gunman, but he is of the type of Southern gentleman who has drifted west and entered into the life with a care-free, happy-go-lucky spirit. Perhaps he does gamble, perhaps he can shoot and is absolutely fearless, but he has the cut of the real lover and is genuine at heart.

All the thrills, stirring action and suspense which serve to make for the popularity of Western dramas are present in "The End of the Game." Throughout, too, there runs a sweet love theme, so carefully handled and so truly romantic that it adds a dignity to the morbid struggles of those old days.

works in a department store, she lets the whole world know it.

A thief, posing as an admirer of Emily, robs the place and suspicion is turned to Nora, but by a clever ruse she clears herself and in the end nails the crooks themselves when they attempt a second robbery. Holding a frying pan over their head until help arrives, the rogues are captured. Jimmie proposes and Nora consents, and that is where the "final close-up" comes in. It will be shown at the Alta theatre today.

ATTEMPT TO FIX DATE FOR VOTE IS FAILURE

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—Efforts to fix the time for vote on the treaty failed in the senate yesterday. Proposals by Lodge for a vote November 12 were rejected by Hitchcock, whose suggestion for a vote this week was, in turn, opposed by Lodge. Despite numerous pleas for prompt action, the treaty situation was left in its previous indefinite stage.

Hitchcock Has Plan
The administration forces decided to ask for a final vote on the treaty Thursday. Voting under the proposal would be continued until 3 p. m. Saturday when, if no resolution of ratification had received the necessary two-thirds vote other business might be taken up. A tentative agreement presented by Hitchcock had the following clauses.

The senate to meet each day at 11 and no senator to speak more than once, and no longer than 15 minutes on each question.

All amendments to the treaty to be voted on at Monday's session.

Today and Wednesday to be devoted to consideration of reservations. If the treaty receives the necessary two-thirds vote the president shall be notified.

If it does not receive the required majority, Friday and Saturday to be devoted to consideration of other resolutions or ratification which the minority of the senate foreign relations committee proposed, these to be voted upon not later than 3 o'clock

Would Vote Thursday

Under the Democratic proposal final voting on the resolution of ratification would begin Thursday, if no resolution proposed received the necessary two-thirds by Saturday evening the senate would then consider itself deadlocked and turn its consideration to other business.

Hitchcock said his plan would "do away with the idea that a mere majority can tie up a resolution of ratification and if it is lost the treaty is killed." Lodge retorted that the constitution gives one-third of the senate power to defeat the treaty but that it does not give it power to control the form of ratification. "That is a matter reserved for the majority," said Lodge.
