"The Game of Boosting"

Buying Home products means more money in your own "pocket." Look at this question of patronizing home products from a purely selfish standpoint if you will—the answer is the same in any case. A moment's thought will show this to you conclusively. Figures don't lie—two plus two always equals four—and just as sure as you and your neighbors, your relatives and your friends confine your purchases to articles of home manufacture, just so surely will you find a happier, more contented, more prosperous community in which to live.
 Then, too, if this city is good enough for you to live in—if this city is magnanimous enough to furnish you employment—to offer you advantages that money alone couldn't buy, shouldn't you by every right reciprocate by spending your money for articles made within her limits. Doesn't the purchase of articles made elsewhere in preference to articles made at home seem pretty shabby treatment to give in return for such generosity
 The game of boosting is a wonderful game. Join in it.
