

People Here and There

J. J. Hamley, senior member of the firm of Hamley and Co. saddlers, wondered, when he came to Pendleton years ago, if he would have a large enough trade to justify the employment of a saddler to help him. Today the company has 24 employees on the payroll, and the majority of them are employed in the making of saddles.

Derby hats for men are coming back, it seems. One came back with E. W. Collins when he returned from a recent Eastern trip, and Al Lindgren, local tailor, has followed suit.

Charles Schatz of Adams, was a Pendleton visitor yesterday. Mr. Schatz is proprietor of the Inland Empire Mercantile of Adams.

F. A. Garrecht, United States district attorney for the eastern district, is in the city today from Spokane to confer on legal matters with Marvin Evans, Walla Walla attorney. It was Mr. Garrecht's grand jury which reported upon the Max Houser case. Houser has renounced the grand jury report and local grain men seem to support him. Mr. Garrecht is a former Walla Walla man and a well known and prominent attorney.

Identified with the progress of Columbia College, at Milton, is Rev. H. S. Shangle, who was in the city yesterday after conducting the burial services for the late Rev. Thoroughman. Rev. Shangle is president of Columbia college, which is a Methodist institution. Bruce Shangle, postmaster at Milton, is the son of Rev. Shangle.

After having read a lot about the debate on the peace treaty George D. Haslett thought he would like to see the debaters in action. So while in Washington on his return from a big shoe convention in Boston he stopped off in the capital city and through Senator Chamberlain was given a seat in the senate. He does not say what he learned about the treaty but while seated in the gallery a page brought him a note from Senator Chamberlain saying that the late seated in front of him was Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth. Mr. Haslett returned to Pendleton several days ago.

Dr. C. J. Smith, wearing the same genial smile that brightened many a sick room when the doctor was a practicing physician in Pendleton years ago, is in the city today. Dr. Smith makes his home in Portland and owns many broad acres of wheat land in Gilliam and Sherman counties.

Tom Montgomery, former cashier of the American National Bank who is here today visiting his brother while enroute to Baker, is not the only Tom Montgomery who is in the banking business. There is a California banker by the same identical name. Several years ago while our T. M. was sitting in San Francisco accompanied by Mrs. Montgomery a feminine voice called to him over the phone at a late hour one night. The lady was seeking the California T. M. and she put the Oregon T. M. in a position where he had to do considerable explaining.

If you should go into J. E. Roman's bank in Astoria and let it be known that you are from Pendleton one of the first queries Mr. Roman would make would be "Do you know my friend Dave Nelson?" From the nature of the banker's talk you would gather the impression that he believes Dave is "some punkin'" and you would find a lot of other Astoria folk with the same viewpoint. Mr. Nelson once lived in Astoria and as he has a summer home at Seaside he is frequently in the city with the deep harbor and strong ambitions. So if you sojourn in Astoria don't forget that you know Dave Nelson.

No ill luck befell Roy W. Rittner yesterday, although the calendar showed that it was Friday, the 13th. The fact that it was Mr. Rittner's birthday was sufficient safeguard against any jinx or hoodoo.

M. J. Carney might well be a candidate for the "He Knew Lincoln" club. Mr. Carney saw the great American years ago when Lincoln appeared as an attorney in a law case in Jacksonville, Illinois. Mr. Carney was then a small boy, but says that the face of Lincoln still remains a vivid picture of memory. Mr. Carney also saw Stephen Douglas, Lincoln's rival.

Howard Drew is in Pendleton today from Echo. Mrs. Drew is with him. Mr. Drew is principal of Echo schools and prominent among county educators.

W. L. Thompson is president of the American National Bank today, having come up from Portland over night. The other six days a week he is vice president of the First National Bank of Portland.

Bob Stanfield, whose sheep graze over the wide plains of many an eastern Oregon township, is starting his campaign for the senatorial nomination by a visit to Pendleton today.

Sheriff Til Taylor returned from Salem and Portland this morning alone. It is his usual custom to bring back a criminal or two every time he makes the trip to the penitentiary with men under sentence.

Joseph Hodgson and James A. Price came down from Weston today. They are interested in the routing of the state highway through their town.

Mr. and Mrs. Sol Baum saw three days of blizzard in Newport, R. I., without the arrival of a newspaper or mail from the outside world. Now they are thawing out and hope to start home about February 20. They are looking forward to some "civilized" weather when they reach Pendleton, says their latest letter home.

Neil Stupp, teacher in district No. 45, is a Saturday visitor to Pendleton. Roy Baker is in the city from Meacham.

J. L. Hoops of Holdman, is here today.

M. J. Jeffries, of Elko, Nevada, is registered at the Gotoen Hotel.

C. E. Mensler, of Hermiston, is in the city today.

National Song Wee Next. County Superintendent of Schools W. W. Green today received notice that national song week is to be observed in the schools throughout the nation during the week of February 22 to 29. John Henry Lyons, who was song leader at Camp Lewis and is now director of music in the Tacoma public schools, is secretary for the western division. Patriotic songs and old favorite hymns are to be encouraged.

Three directors from each of ten school districts about Milton and Free-water met in Milton this afternoon to decide on a location for the proposed new union high school for the east end.
