CORNISH SCHOOL WILL HOLD SEATTLE CLASSES

Coupled with the announcement of the summer school session of the Cornish School of Music of Seattle, which will continue from July 17 until September 4, is the news that Sergei Klbanesky of New York will head the list of visiting teachers for the term. Mr. Klbanesky is probably the leading master of voice in America today and numbers some of the most distinguished singers in the country among his pupils. One of these, who is well known in the Northwest is Lotta Madson, who was formerly a resident of Seattle, but for a number of years has been in New York. Mr. Klbanesky will conduct master classes in voice, throughout the summer school term, and has announced that he will offer a free scholarship to the most promising pupil. Other well known names that will be found on the summer school faculty will include Clavin Brainerd Cady, director of Normal courses, harmony and theory; Boyd Wells, associate director of the Cornish School, piano; John Blackmore, of the Bush Temple

Conservatory, Chicago, Piano; Francis J. Armstrong, head of the violin department of the Cornish School, violin; Mary Ann Wells, head of the dancing department, several of whose pupils have already made names for themselves on the professional stage in New York, dancing; and Margaret Prendergast McLean, of the dramatic department of the Cornish School, dramatic art, besides the remainder of the school faculty numbering some forty teachers. Special classes will be conducted for music teachers and professional musicians.

MARY'S DIVORCE FAILS TO DIM POPULARITY

"Our Mary" of the yellow curls and appealing ways may not be popular with Nevada court officials just now, but she is still the darling of Pendleton movie fans, according to managers of the local picture theaters. The domestic trouble of Mrs. Gladys Smith Moore Fairbanks has not dimmed her popularity with local people, say reports from the ticket booths, and "When's Mary coming again?" is a frequent query. Not Marguerite Clark, but Mabel Normand is second choice, say the managers. Marguerite is third with Norma and Constance Talmadge as close contestants. Then comes Geraldine Farrar, followed by Pearl White, the heroine of a million hair-breadth escapes in movie serials. "Put him in any kind of a play and old Bill Hart is the boy that draws the crowd," according to one of the managers. "The kids like him and so do the grown-ups. Next are Doug Fairbanks and Charles Ray, when it comes to general popularity. But the one the women like best of all is Wallace Reid; I think it's that kissable mouth." Plays which show the great outdoors are best liked here, judging from receipts. "Too much society stuff doesn't get by with Pendleton people," said one ticket-seller. "Western and Alaskan films are the ones the fans ask for."
