Crop prospects in Fergus county, Montana, are excellent, say Judge C. M. Marsh and John Montgomery, who returned this morning after a visit to their land in that region. They state that although Montana, like Oregon, experienced an extremely cold winter, the winter wheat is looking fine. In April they report the days of moisture in Fergus county totaled 28. There is much talk of drilling for oil in Montana say the local men because oil has been discovered in several places. The oil boom has brought crowds of new people to the state and geologists are kept busy investigating conditions.

Since wine cellars have become perfectly useless in the great New York hotels, resourceful managers have been figuring out ways and means to put the valuable space they occupied to profitable use. In some hotels the wine cellars have been turned into soft drink factories, in others carpenter shops and storerooms. This photograph shows how one wine cellar was transformed into an indoor golf course. The management says it has more than paid its way.
