THE STORY OF THE COLVILLE VALLEY

The Colville Valley is located about two hours ride by automobile north of the city of Spokane, in Stevens County, Wash. The valley is from two to four miles in width and is practically level. The soil in the bottom is a black silt loam and on the higher lands a clayey loam. The rainfall is about 20 inches and comes at very opportune times during the summer as well as at other seasons.
 Wheat, oats, rye, barley, corn, alfalfa, timothy, clover, alfalfa and all root crops are grown in the valley, as well as different varieties of vegetables and fruit. It is not uncommon to have yields of 40 bushels of wheat, 100 bushels of oats and four tons of timothy hay or alfalfa.
 Nowhere in the inland Empire is there a better stock country. The hills on each side of the valley affords thousands of acres of free open range that is well grassed with bunch grass. The range is well watered with good, pure spring water and lakes. The winters are mild and it is necessary to feed only about four months of each year.
 The livestock banks in the valley will loan you nearly 100 per cent to buy cattle provided you have the feed and facilities for taking care of them.

 Akron Has Corn Flakes Geizer
 Akron, Ohio, generally known as the rubber center of the world is also the home of factories that turn out various brands of Corn Flakes. An underground pipe line, worked on the suction principle, conveys the grain from one plant, through the center of the city to another plant. During the last cold spell this pipe bursted and corn flakes were mixed with snow flakes in a veritable geizer that covered the street.
