

People Here and There

Nearly as far famed as the photograph of the Cayuse twins by Major Lee Moorhouse, is that of Dell Scully catching suckers through a hole in the street at Astoria, 15 or more years ago. Mr. Scully, now a traveling salesman, formerly owned a cigar store in the city by the sea and in those days tide water coursed far up under the main streets. Perched on a chair in front of his establishment, Mr. Scully one day dropped in a hook and line through the wooden street and hauled up a fish. A photographer was called and the event chronicled. Even to this day, with the streets changed to bituminous pavement and the water kept out by a seawall, Astoria stationers sell this picture postcard. Mr. Scully was in Pendleton last evening and called at the new Elks home.
