The minor leaguers took the position that while they might act as backers of the olive branch, they would not go so far as to scorch their own wings.

Joining in the crusade against gambling in baseball, the minor leaguers unanimously adopted a resolution urging the passage in every state legislature of a bill designed to stamp out the evil.

The resolution followed the lines of a bill proposed for introduction in the Texas legislature. It sets the punishment of bribery or attempted bribery of "any baseball player, umpire or manager in a baseball game or any other persons connected with baseball" at imprisonment from two to five years.

The minors adopted an amendment to include punishment of owners and officials who are connected in any way with "fixing" games.
