in Lawrence, Mass., and got $500. And we were fighting with kid gloves. Times Have Changed "When I see one of these braves pull up alongside Madison Square Garden in a limousine and have a secretary and a manager announce his arrival, I think of the old days when we had to hide away from sheriffs and sneak out under cover of darkness to an old barn. When I see these high financiers of the gloves enter the ring in a silk dressing robe, with a barber's art all over their faces and heads, I get weak thinking of our days when a 'prize fighter' could be arrested just for being found in a town.

"And all this chatter and argument now about weighing in. Why when we were roaming around the country, going wild over a $100 purse we used to agree verbally to a fight, weigh in and then wait for the promoters to find a place for the bout. Sometimes it took forty-eight hours or longer and we never weighed in again.

"Harry Gilmore, the champion of Canada, was matched to fight me, Jan. 11, 1887. We weighed in in Boston and waited around two days in a tavern for the promoters to find a place. Two sleighs called for us the second night and hauled us over to Lawrence where a ring had been rigged up in a blacksmith shop. We found about thirty spectators keeping warm around a big red hot wood stove. On the floor above some kind of a regimental band was playing. The windows were covered with cloth and we were not allowed to make the slightest noise. We fought 38 rounds. Gilmore was knocked out and I gave him the room I had reserved in the tavern. We went to three places that night, but were denied admission. Finally one of the party with me got a room in a roadhouse and I sneaked in the back way with a big coat over my head. We had to stay there three days while the sheriff was hunting us.

Famous Battle Was Draw "On Nov. 16, the same year, I was matched to fight Jim Carney. We weighed in at South Framingham and waited a day until two old carriage came in at dusk and hustled us miles over to Revere, Mass. We fought in a barn. The cows, horses, pigs and chickens were moved over to one end to make room for about thirty spectators. We fought 74 rounds to a draw and then had to beat it right out of the state.

"They were the days when the going was hard. Look at the lightweights today. Jackson wanting $50,000 to box a champion with a pair of pillows on his hands and Tenderloin wanting $10,000 for a chance at a championship crown.

"No wonder, that about knocks me out, eh?"

MEXICAN REFUGEES IN U. S. SUGGEST REFORM

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—(A. P.)—An analysis of Mexico's problems with a program of their solution is presented in an open letter to the Mexican people being circulated in Mexico signed by nine members of a group of political refugees in the United States.

Fifteen major problems, including the land and labor question, international relations, education and the financial rehabilitation of the country, are outlined.

As a "means for making real democracy effective in Mexico," the letter advocates the limiting of the ballot to federal and state citizens not under 21 years old who can read and write the Spanish language and have a means of livelihood. This would bar the great mass of illiterate Indians, except in municipal elections, until they had been given an opportunity to read and write Spanish, provision for which is made under the heading of education.

Illiteracy is declared to be the greatest menace to the country, the letter asserting that 60,000 grade schools should be established by government assistance. The Carranza policy of limiting private initiative in addition is prohibited. A frank and open international policy is urged, particularly toward the U. S.
