MONGREL DOG DIES OF STARVATION AFTER VIGIL BESIDE MASTER'S GRAVE

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 1.—"Shep," a mongrel dog, was found dead at the grave of his late master, Virgil Farley, in the cemetery of the National Soldiers' Home, at Sawtelle, near here. The dog had refused food after Farley died and officials of the Home expressed the belief his action had been caused by grief for his master.

When Farley became ill and was taken to the Home hospital, he said to the dog:

"Shep, old pard, they won't let you stay here, but you must come to see me every day."

And every day the dog was permitted to see his master.

Then Farley died and "Shep" followed the body to the morgue. Later he walked beside the gun-carriage upon which the body was borne to the grave. When the grave was closed, "Shep" lay down beside it and remained there, on guard, until he died.
