Nation's Treasures in Peril

The originals of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States are kept in the State Department library, in this thin safe which experts say wouldn't stand a fire for 20 minutes. It isn't even waterproof. For years Congress has ignored, annually, a request for $20,000 to buy a safe that's safe. Such a bill is now pending. Meanwhile the nation's priceless documents are left in the thin safe despite the fact that a fire such as that which recaulty destroyed the national census records, would quickly cut through the thin walls.

PALO ALTO, Cal., Jan. 27.—(U. P.)—That one can be intellectual yet not learned was the pecufair paradox brought to light here in a test which was made in an economics cless at Stanford university. It showed that many college students who are studying the most advanced theories of economics, lack the general knowledge of the man of the street.

A series of questions was proposinded to the class. One was the naming of the capitals of four states, California, Illinois, New York and Texas. A good man answered that New York was the capital of New York, Chicago the capital of Illinois and numerous
