Ballast

You find them on every advertising list—the mediums that are relied upon in times of uncertainty; that act as ballast in stormy weather; that balance and stabilize at the crucial moment.

When lists are cut, when the frills and non-essentials of an advertising appropriation are eliminated, it is these mediums that stand out—strong, rugged, dependable. They are the business-controls. They are the advertiser's bread and butter.

Such a medium is The East Oregonian.

Because its circulation is sound, well-grounded, established—it is one newspaper to which all advertisers turn in times like these.

When dollars must be counted, when results are the final test, when advertising must develop real cash sales, it is—

Eastern Oregon's Greatest Newspaper.
