BOZEMAN, Mont., April 16.—(A. P.)—Bozeman and other parts of Gallatin county was visited during Thursday and Friday by the worst wind-storm in 40 years. At its highest point, near midnight, the wind attained a velocity of 48 miles an hour and throughout the night and until day-break it was close to that point.
Toward last evening it moderated. The average velocity of the wind up to 5 p. m. this afternoon was 25 miles an hour. In the outlying districts barns and outbuildings were unroofed and in cases demolished. One frame building on the edge of town here, in which the watchman for a green house sleeps, was tipped over by the wind. He escaped injury. Telegraph and telephone lines in all directions were blown down and wire service crippled.

WHAT PENDLETON GRADE SCHOOLS ARE DOING

Hawthorne School
The third grade have thoroughly enjoyed the dramatization of the story, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs." Eleven parents visited the third grade last week.
The third and fourth grades are sharing the "neatness" pennant for the past month.
The pupils of the fourth grade made a bouquet of tulips for the black board during their art periods.
The hygiene class enjoyed the various demonstrations given by Howard Young for carrying a severely injured person. Most interesting was the coat lift, coat-tail carry, fireman's carry and coat collar portage.
A very instructive "geography guessing contest" was carried out by the sixth grade in which each pupil described fully, one of the counties of Oregon to be guessed by the rest of the class.
Much friendly competition is being shown between the winners in each group, preparing for track meet.
A drinking fountain is being installed on our school grounds by Orville Reeve, with the assistance of some of the high school boys.
Thirty three pupils of the seventh grade have received reading certificates from the county library.
The arithmetic classes have been much interested in the drawing to make up in connection with art work.

Now YOUR FIGHT IS WON!

Seconds To a Cent
A Housewife Knows 7 Days a Week
The Average Pocket-book
AN EDITORIAL ON BUYING

The profiteer has been put out of business, and a sizable amount has been added to the purchasing power of the dollar. As a member of the vast army of consumers you are naturally gratified at the result.
With prices reduced to a reasonable level, you are ready to do business once more.

But you will insist upon getting your money's worth. The days of easy getting and careless spending are past. The dollar will buy more than it would a year ago, but there are not so many dollars in the average pocketbook. Shopping around has become a virtue, as well as a fine art.

The successful merchant knows his market. He knows to a cent what standard goods in his line are worth from day to day. Moreover, he knows standard goods when he sees them. He can recognize seconds at a glance. He knows what he can sell and approximately, what price he can get.

The shopper who seeks to get the most for his money must possess the same sort of information. The housewife must know current values and where to secure the best quality, style, and price. She must be able to distinguish between a real bargain (though the price may seem high) and a spurious bargain which will prove costly, because the goods are not up to the mark. In other words, the shopper must know the market in order to buy advantageously.

Do you realize that full information about the market is laid before you seven days in the week in prodigious profusion of detail? All you have to do is to consult, compare and digest the advertisements.

These market reports are automatic and self-regulating in the accuracy and completeness of the information they convey. Style, quality, price and service—the four main essentials in all buying—are featured so the advertisement reader is in a position to make satisfactory selection. If one merchant fails to give full information about what he has to sell, the buyer will patronize the merchant who is more informative.

Advertisements are not statements of opinion, but of the hard facts of business competition.

Competition today is among the sellers who seek your business. A year ago it was among the buyers seeking goods at any price. The consumers themselves have brought about the change. Normal buying now will make the victory of greater benefit to them. We must encourage manufacturers to keep busy, and merchants to turn their stocks often, otherwise prices will necessarily advance, because goods will become scarce. When you buy advertised goods you encourage quick stock turns. This insures not only the best quality, but the lowest price for you. If opposition of consumers to this great economic law is carried beyond reason it reacts against the consumers themselves.

Because this is true, consumers should study the advertising columns of the newspapers as never before.
