WHEAT DOWN SEVERAL CENTS IN CHICAGO

Both May and July wheat declined in the Chicago Grain Market today. May wheat closing at $1.18 and July $1.19 1/2. Yesterday's market showed May wheat closing at $1.42 1/2 and July at $1.12.

Table with columns: Open, High, Low, Close for Wheat and Corn. Includes prices for May and July contracts.

Wheat—The only strength shown in the market today was at the opening after which buying petered out and prices turned rapidly on scattered selling by banks and by cash houses against purchases in the country. The latter was the outstanding feature as substantiated the numerous advices to the effect that country was more disposed to sell wheat to arrive than for some time. Some export demand was reported but volume closed was not large enough to be significant factor and failed to offset repeated advices that the United Kingdom is cancelling purchases made previously. The Canadian situation again came into prominence when messages from Winnipeg reported cash wheat presiding for sale with demand apparently satisfied and premiums lower. The weather map this a. m. was more favorable for the crop as well as for the roads to haul grain to country stations. The increased country selling in our opinion suggests a lower market as domestic milling interests are not buying at any extent and exporters who have the futures bought will undoubtedly sell out as they find it easier to secure the cash wheat.

Cash Wheat Market table with columns: Hard White, Soft White, White Club, Hard Winter, North Spring, Red Walla Walla, Big Bend. Includes prices per bushel.
