Only Big Leaguers Wearing Specs

George Toporcer (left), new second baseman for the St. Louis Cardinals, and pitcher Lee Meadows (right), of the Phillies, are the only two players in big league baseball who wear spectacles. They're near-sighted and, without the glasses, can't read a newspaper further than six inches from their noses. Yet they say they can see the ball in play better than many of their fellow players.

"I advise, unhesitatingly," he added, "the use of high heels. I do not mean that the silly three-and-a-half to four inch Louis heel with its curved mechanical shape and inefficient support. The height of the heel for remedial purposes should not exceed two and a quarter inches, and in house shoes should not be less than one and a quarter inches. In cases of overstrained feet, slippers must be avoided."

DOCTOR GIVES IDEAS
ON CORRECT WALKING

LONDON, May 7.—(A. P.)—The mothers who train their children to walk with toes pointing outward and counsel their little girls never to wear high heels when they grow up, have been told they were all wrong, by Dr. W. H. Trethowan, orthopaedic surgeon, in an address at the institute of Hygiene.

"To walk properly," he said, "the feet should be kept absolutely parallel. The 'quarter to six' attitude is one of the big mistakes of physical training. Three minutes to 12 and three minutes past is what you want when standing.

"A long stride is not good for the feet. A slow, short step is better, for it makes you rise on the toe.

"Never discourage a child who is turning his toes in unless he has an actual deformity of the foot. He is probably trying to cure himself of knock-knees or weak ankles."

Reasonably high heels are very excellent things, the surgeon said. Low heels are all right for children, or for adults with a perfect foot, but unfortunately no foot was perfect.
