Trail Blazers at Entrance to Sequoia National Park

This Highway Will Cover Six Thousand Miles of Roadway—Will Connect Twelve National Parks and Go Through the Most Beautiful Scenery in America

ONE of the most important movements inaugurated last year in the National Park service was the completion of blocking out the National Park-to-Park Highway. This may revolutionize travel in the West. A party of trail blazers started from Denver and made the circuit to mark the best automobile road which will connect the National Parks of the West.

Six Thousand Miles of Road It is planned to get the co-operation of Federal and State Governments for the hard surfacing eventually of the six thousand miles of roadway which connects twelve National Parks. The traveler has felt himself fortunate if he visited one National Park. This highway will give him a well defined, definite route in the form of a circle which connects beauties which in extent and grandeur cannot be duplicated.

A Delightful Vacation Trip Picture to yourself a summer going from one National Park to another. Can you imagine anything more delightful? You will not alone see our magnificent National playgrounds but will get glimpses of the marvelous wild life of America. You will experiences many kinds of climate and you will be so imbued with a sense of the mighty wonders that you will become an apostle of See America First, if you were not that when you started. This wonderful highway leads up mountain trails, runs in fertile valleys, crosses wide rivers and running brooks, and touches many transcontinental highways. You will find here shapes that fit your head correctly and conform to your particular type of face.

Rocky Mountain Park We visit first the Rocky Mountain National Park, which has recently had the gift of an attractive gateway on the Estes Park side. Its attractions—mountains, lakes and flowing meadows—are innumerable and the fine Fall River road is almost finished. It will connect the East and West sides of the Park and give access to wonderful scenery. You can spend any number of days here where there are good hotels and chalets. Leaving this Park the Highway will take you to the North and West through Wyoming to the ever-popular Yellowstone National Park with its geysers, many old hued springs, vari-colored canyon and petrified forest. Never has the Yellowstone Park been more popular than now, and each year increases its attractiveness. Glacier National Park Though it may be a temptation to linger the "round the circle" traveler on the National Park-to-Park Highway will pass on North through Montana to the next prime attraction, the Glacier National Park. Every one knows that this park affords the preservation of the Blackfoot Indians, and one of the pleasures is the sight of them, for some members of the tribe are usually around the hotels. The scenery—glaciers, high mountains, rivers, lakes and valleys—make this park a rival of the Canadian Rockies just North of it. The park has been popular from a tourist's standpoint though climate conditions limit the season from June 15 to September 15. This park should be visited because it is one of the most beautiful in our chain of scenic gems.

chasma, the Grand Canyon National Park, only recently called this for originally it was the Grand Canyon National Monument. Nearly seventy thousand visitors were here last year. This is an all year round park. The hotels and buildings are refined in architecture, the drives are so arranged that one can look from the rim down, over the canyon and there is ample provision for taking the sight-seers down to the Colorado River if he desires. Books and articles have been written on the diversified colorings of this great gap in the earth—this yawning, terrific chasma, the equal of which is unknown.

There is one more park that our "swing around the circle" enables us to see and that is the Mesa Verde National Park of Colorado. This depends not so much on its scenery as on its marvelous ruins which show the habitations of a prehistoric race. Excavations are being on here constantly. Roads are extended year by year to the principal attractions—the House House, Cliff Palace, etc.—can be reached. It is thought whole villages are buried here.

These are the wonderful parks reached by the master highway and connecting links. The Yellowstone, Roosevelt, National Parks and Pacific Highways and the Old Trails and Rainbow route meet and cross it. What better way to see our National Parks than to go this way on a scenic-loop, whose finishing may be a nation-wide undertaking?

Yosemite National Park Another jaunt takes us to Lassen Volcano National Park in California, where roads and trails are being constructed and soon we find ourselves at Yosemite National Park, well known to all park lovers as one of the finest playgrounds we have set aside for the people. Last year 25,000 persons camped in the free camps on the floor of Yosemite Valley. Motorists find good service, the University of California gives lectures and there are national guide talks but, of course, the beauty and wonders of the park are the chief attraction. Ever increasing
