PREMIER CRAIG'S LAST WORDS TO UNIONISTS ARE 'FLY UNION JACK'

Sinn Feiners Regard Election as Joke and Ulster Parliament as Impossible.

BELFAST, May 24.—(A. P.)—Sir James Craig's last word to the unionists on the eve of the Ulster elections—"Fly the union Jack"—was complied with to the full in Belfast last night.

Falls Road, Joseph Devlin's stronghold, and other nationalist and Sinn Fein quarters were virtually barren of bunting. Their people regard the election as a joke and the Ulster parliament as something that can never successfully operate.

Those nationalists who have votes in the orange districts will not attempt to record them, and the same may be said of the unionists who poll their ballots on the other side of the border line. But both sides freely charge that the ballots of these people will find their way into the ballot boxes.

Police and military are still keeping the adherents of the two parties away from each other, the faculty of any attempt at picking a fight being shown today when Sinn Feiners attempted to interfere with sidewalk painters.

They had hardly heaved the first stone when armored cars and lorries loaded with police and machine guns arrived and scattered the rioters.

The voting began at 8 a. m. today, continuing in most districts for 12 hours but in some of the favored ones until 9 p. m.

Soldiers and police are keeping order in Belfast but at large force of "black and tan" will assure the regulars.

Premier Urges Loyalty

BELFAST, May 24.—(A. P.)—Sir James Craig, premier designate of Ulster, in a pre-election appeal to the loyalists today, says:
