CLAIMS TO HAVE FOUND $73,000,000 IN CAVE

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., June 21.—(I. N. S.)—Adam Fischer, of this city, has just returned to the states from a successful ten-year search for hidden wealth in the heart of the mountains of Mexico. Fischer claims to have located a mine, which after cave where he says over $73,000,000 worth of gold and silver bullion and Spanish octagonal dollars have been concealed since the early part of the nineteenth century. He is awaiting a concession from the Mexican government in order to bring out the huge treasure he claims to have located.

Fischer asserts as his belief that bandits captured the treasure trove while it was being moved to a place of safety by agents of the old Spanish government to protect it from revolutionaries who were then making war upon the government. The bandits were then slain by the revolutionists, Fischer contends.

Fischer discovered the cache of gold, he says through a friend who was at one time captured by the bandits and who learned of the location of the treasure. Fischer has been roaming the mountain fastnesses of Mexico for ten years in search of the treasure cave.

POSTMASTER GENERAL.
(By United Press.)

Imagine, if you can, the enthusiasm of a college football cheer leader, and the exact precision of the small town Sunday school combined and intermingled in one individual. That individual is Will Hayes, postmaster general of the United States.

Stir in a bit of good nature, a morning coat and silk hat, a dash of affability and a brisk manner, and you'll have a mental movie of Hayes on his way to attend a cabinet meeting at the white house.

Hayes has set himself to the task of reorganizing the post office department and the mail service of the entire United States, to put it on a "plane of high efficiency and speed." And visitors of the postmaster general get the impression that Hayes is just warming up to the job. The most impressive thing about the postmaster general probably is his earnestness and enthusiasm. As he talks he emphasizes his words by pointing his finger like a schoolmaster. Hayes tries to make you understand that he has implicit faith in what he is saying to you. Few visitors can withstand his eloquence. He sends 'em away smiling.

Hayes is probably the most informal member of the government. Often during the busy morning, the door of the palatial office of the postmaster will be thrown open suddenly from the inside and Hayes will burst out, coat-tails flying like the late Col. Theodore Roosevelt. Visitors whom Hayes sees in this manner in the outer office go away impressed.

The postmaster general was anxious to see them at all costs. This is because Hayes carries the impression that he tons himself away from a meeting inside the private office for just a moment with them.

ed in the Castle of Espanans, near Valladolid, Spain, are "aced in peril, due to the neglect of government officials to keep the buildings in proper repair. Thirty-three million documents, comprising the archives of Spain, many of them preserved since the days of Cardinal Xumenes, are in danger.
