the Tonopah Daily Times of Tonopah, Nevada, has been a visitor in Pendleton today while enroute to Seattle. Tonopah is a town of 5000 people and just now is disturbed by a miners strike according to the Times publisher. The town is dependent chiefly upon mining.

Finding landing fields is a difficulty which is confronting flyers just at present, says Walter E. Lees, of the La Grande Aircraft Co. who is in Pendleton today on business. Mr. Lees states that because of the wheat crop it is difficult to find available fields. He contemplates making commercial flights from Pendleton soon.

M. Fitzmaurice, appraiser for the Federal Land Bank of Spokane, was a Pendleton visitor yesterday. He is returning to his home in Condon after appraising farms in the La Grande and Elgin district on which application had been made for the recent bond issue money and this is expected to be distributed before the summer is over among farmers who have applied for loans. It will probably be a month, however, before the loans are made.

NEWS OF THE COUNTY OFFICES AND OFFICERS

Templeton's Trial Friday. The trial of J. C. Templeton, brought back yesterday from Coquille yesterday by Deputy Sheriff Wea Spears will be held Friday morning in the court of Justice Gray. The charge against Templeton is wife desertion. He was living with another woman in the Coos Bay country when he was located there.

Judge Phelps Sustained. Two decisions of the state supreme court have been received by Fee and Fee in which decisions made by Judge G. W. Phelps in the circuit court are affirmed. One of the cases was that of Maggie Hugenbotham against D. B. Wolford in which cancellation of a lease held by the defendant on the plaintiff's farm was at issue. According to the court's decision, the finding of Judge Phelps is sustained with a modification that the case be dismissed without prejudice. Fee & Fee represented the defendant. The other case had to do with litigation in the estate of Jackson Nelson and was entitled Lee Johnson against W. R. Taylor. It involved the right of a creditor to come in and ask for administration of the estate. The particular point of law under question was whether in such a case an attorney living outside of Oregon could sign a notice of appeal from the county court to the circuit court. J. W. Brooks of Walla Walla was the other attorney in the case, and the decision of Judge Phelps that he could not take an appeal was confirmed by the higher court.

Origin of People's Warehouse. As owners of 'the big store' and with the showing we could make as to the trade possibilities, we secured credit with several of the big wholesalers, and in 18 months we had paid all outstanding notes, though to do so we owed big bills to the jobbing houses. We invoiced one year and four months after we took the store over and found we were over $10,000 to the good. When we bought the store we threw up a half dollar to see if we could call the firm Cohen & Falk or Falk and Cohen. Falk won, but we decided to call it 'The People's Warehouse,' and under that house flag it has sailed a prosperous course ever since.

TWO OFFICERS KILLED.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—(U. N. S.) Two officers of the army air service were killed on Bolling Field while practicing for the joint army and navy bombing tests.

That figure providing I would have time enough to learn the business in addition to keeping the books. I landed in Pendleton April 9, 1884. Our store was located where the Inland Empire Savings bank now is. Next to our store was the office of the East Oregonian. The first man in Pendleton I met was C. S. Jackson.

Never Shaved for 8 Years

"There was a great bunch of men in Pendleton in those days. I overheard someone say, 'Who is the new kid in town?' As a matter of fact I did look like a 16-year-old kid. I decided right then to remedy that situation, so I let my beard grow and for the first eight years I was in Pendleton I never shaved.

"After I had worked two and a half years for Lehman Blom I decided that working for wages was never going to get me very far, so I asked him what he would take for the store. He said he would sell for $17,000. I had just $250 saved. I went to one of the clerks named Falk, as I knew he had saved $1500. I told him I was going to buy the store, and I would take him in as my partner. He was delighted to change from employe to employer, to he put his $1500 up. This, with my $250, made $1750. I deposited it in the bank and on the strength of this showing I borrowed $2000. This made $3750. The $2000 was borrowed through Mose Haruch, a prominent druggist of Pendleton at that time and now a member of the firm of Wadhams & Co. in Portland. I reserved $750 to pay my freight bill and made a payment of $3000. We gave notes for the balance.

"Dangerous Curve Ahead"—Comedy of a Summer Vacation—Champion Love Maker of the Screen—Most Expensive Comedy Ever Produced.

THE story is of popular Phoebe Mabee, a small town girl who jilted her fiance, Harley Jones, in a quarrel over Newton, the fashionable and fascinating new admirer from the City—who returns to town next morning. Some time later Phoebe meets Harley as she is leaving her home—all the old feeling returns with a rush and Harley again places the ring upon Phoebe's finger. They settle in the city where Harley progresses in business and eventually three children have arrived. A business trip to Europe is necessary for Harley, but Phoebe must remain behind with the children whom she takes to a seaside resort where she again meets Newton, who is there with his aunt, Mrs. Noxon, society leader. When they return to town, Mrs. Noxon sends Phoebe an invitation to dine with her, which Phoebe accepts. Then Harley returns and on the night of the dinner their eldest boy becomes very ill—Harley is greatly distressed while Phoebe is torn between duty and desire. In great distress she finally determines to keep her engagement, where all goes well until Mrs. Noxon insists upon talking of the child whom Phoebe has said was quite well. Finally she can stand it no longer and excuses herself—rushing home to the child, who in delirium is calling for his mother, but does not recognize her in her party frock. Tearing it off and throwing on a bath robe she returns—the boy recognizes her then and is quieted. As he falls to sleep smiling, Phoebe sinks to the floor exhausted. Harley, who has been with the child every minute goes to her and they are reunited in love once more.

Up to the time she had just passed her seventeenth birthday, Jean Paige spent her entire life on her father's farm in Paris, Ill. Like a great many other great stellar lights of the day, Miss Paige came to recognition in two-act O. Henry masterpieces. She acquitted herself so well that she was made leading woman for Harry T. Morgan and appeared with him in many productions, including "The Darker Hour" and "The Birth of a Soul." She also was leading woman for Eric Wilkerson in "The Fortune Hunter," a screen adaptation of the famous play by Winchell Smith.

After one year of serials, she was selected to play the leading role in "Black Beauty." This production brought her to the front as one of the screen's most charming stars.

"Two Weeks With Pay" is the comedy of a pretty shop girl's summer vacation. It would be hard on the shopkeepers of the country if all vacations ended the way Pansy's did, but it was surely a successful two weeks, from Pansy's point of view, even though it started rather inauspiciously in a mud puddle, ruining Pansy's traveling costume and forcing her to make a very conspicuous and disheveled first appearance at the smart hotel which she had selected for her vacation place. Pansy's embarrassment was tempered, however, by memories of the hero of the automobile accident, who had landed in the same mud puddle. Pansy was sure he must be a millionaire because he reminded her so much of a Greek god.

It really wasn't Pansy's fault that everybody at the hotel believed her to be Marie La Tour, a famous movie actress, resting in her room. The movie Pansy denied the all galled, the more the hotel guests talked about her. So Pansy finally decided to enjoy the fun and see what happened. All went well until the real Marie La Tour arrived on the scene. All's well that ends in a bang, but for two, and that's how the wholesome, breezy vacation comedy ends, for Pansy's hero of the mud puddle turned out to be no millionaire but just a brick-garage owner who felt no hesitations about retaining his job in the Dress Shop to take up general housework in a small family of two.

Enteric O'Brien. Mr. O'Brien is a big six footer with blue eyes, brown hair, and mouth that curves in a grin at the most singular and good smile in the world. Audiences of the crime and sentenced to prison. Blossom is carried away by the crooks. After a time Blossom escapes from prison and appears in New York as a wealthy student returning home from Oxford. He carries through successfully a plot to capture Blossom and at the same time he established his innocence of the murder of Barleigh. Sessue Hayakawa and his wife take the parts of Hayakawa and Blossom. "Skirts" Equal comedy standards were completely thrown into the discard when "Skirts" was produced. In place of one or two stars, not less than fifteen of the most prominent film comedy players of note appear. In place of the dozen or so bathing beauties, three thousand of the "Fascinating Sunshine Widows" prance their way through the scenes, clad in creations calculated to make the eyes of the fair sex smart with envy. Ethel Grey Terry, the brilliant young dramatic actress who deserted the stage to achieve fame in motion pictures, has been selected as the heroine for James Oliver Curwood's famous short story, "The Wilderness Mail," the motion picture title of which will be "The Northern Trail." She recently completed "Heartthrob," and a picture with William & Har-
