COLORADO SHRUB SAID TO CONTAIN RUBBER

ALAMOSA, Colo., June 27.—(C. N. S.)—San Luis Valley residents are keenly interested in reports reaching here that crude rubber is contained in an indigenous shrub that grows quite prolifically in this region, known as "rabbit brush."

E. C. McCarthy, professor of botany at the Colorado Agricultural College in Fort Collins, is expected here soon to gather several hundred pounds of the shrub to ship to Eastern rubber companies for further experimental purposes.

That the shrub has a large percentage of crude rubber has already been established, according to Professor McCarthy, who says that, after extracting considerable of this material from the shrub, he sent it to a big rubber company for tests. Chemical analysis disclosed, according to Professor McCarthy, that the rubber in the shrub was of a high grade and that it vulcanized readily.

Professor McCarthy declared in a letter to the local Chamber of Commerce that experiments will be continued at the Agricultural College to determine whether the rubber-bearing shrubs can be transplanted and improved.

The battle of the Little Big Horn is to be re-enacted on the forty-fifth anniversary of the Custer Massacre, June 25, with United States aviators and members of the American Legion taking the part of General Custer's ill-fated forces and Cheyenne and Crow Indians representing the attacking Sioux.
