

LABOR IS LOSING ITS HOLD ON POLITICS IN ITALY DESPITE IMPRESSIVE SOCIALIST VOTE

Economic Situation Unaffected by Election Returns; Soviet Russia Asks Recognition.

MILAN, July 5.—(By Clara Wolf, Special Correspondent of the I. N. S.)—Workers' control in the factories of Italy is a dead issue. This emphatic statement was made in this correspondent's interview with the president of the International News Service by one of Italy's most influential industrialists, head of an internationally important manufacturing organization and a recognized leader in his own country. While he absolutely forbade the use of his name for publication, his statement, authentic and definite as it is, is of no little significance. It reflects the sharp change in Italian industrial conditions since the revolutionary furor of last fall.

Industrialists in Italy, he said, "who were ready last fall when 500 factories were occupied by reds to make certain concessions to the workers, will now accept no plan that means experimenting with management of production. They do not at any time intend to give their employees even a modified part of the factories merely agreeing that they would consider a plan for the formation of a species of national industrial commission, made up of representatives of the government, the industries, the employees and the public, to have a purely advisory power."

Industrialists are confident that the question of workers' control will not even be introduced in the next chamber, he added.

"Certainly the anti-Socialist deputies will not introduce it, and labor's representatives, I think, will be too busy with questions of unemployment and wages."

When asked if platinum, of which soviet Russia claims to have a large supply, would be acceptable he replied: "Platinum would be useful to Italy only for trade with other countries, and as soon as we sent it elsewhere it would be attached. In fact, the only raw materials Russia has offered so far have been quite useless to us. Copper, which they say they are ready to send us in considerable quantities, we already have in sufficient quantity for our industries."

"The Russian question in Italy is political and not industrial. The Russian commission is working for recognition of the soviet government."

"Labor organizations, on the other hand, like those of other European countries and the United States, have no stored surplus. They can't face massed unemployment. The only way we can hope to get back to normal is to refuse all experimentation during such a serious crisis, and to lower wages so that we can continue to produce in competition with other countries."

"Want Russian Cash Purchases. In answer to a question as to what is the attitude of Italian industry toward the Russian soviet commission in Italy, which has stated time and again that Italy could free herself from dependence on America and Great Britain for her supply of coal and petroleum and other raw materials if she would open trade with Russia, he said: "Russia is plainly in no condition at present to send us important quantities of coal or oil. There would be no opposition, I am sure, from industries if Russia could pay us in cash. There are no claims in Italy against Russia, no deposits of gold would not be attached to meet old debts. But obviously the soviet government is not ready to pay in cash."

"The Russian question in Italy is political and not industrial. The Russian commission is working for recognition of the soviet government."

ZITA STILL HOPES TO REGAIN HER THRONE

PARIS, July 5.—(I. N. S.)—"Chercher in femme"—that old French proverb was never so true as during the recent attempt of Charles of Hungary to regain his throne in Budapest. It was stated that only one person knew of his coup d'etat and that only one person prepared the plot. That person was Empress Zita of Bourbon Parme, Charles' wife. Even in her childhood, according to Monsieur de Bonnefont, a well-known French writer, Empress Zita was known for her domineering ways, as well as for her lovable and winsome manners. By her love she won over to her the people of Hungary, although she was a foreigner to them, for she comes of the French branch of the Bourbon Parme family. In Switzerland Charles and his wife became known as the young lovers. Zita is considered one of the prettiest monarchs of Europe. Unfortunately she has high ambitions and thirsts for luxury and an easy life, which she has not had in Switzerland since her exile. This she was goaded to persuade Charles to make his bold bid for the crown. She is considered the best of mothers and takes the utmost interest in her five children. Today she has not given up hope of returning to Hungary as queen of that country.

LONDON, July 5.—(I. N. S.)—A tame ferret belonging to a London resident is suckling a young rat with her litter of five young ferrets. Attempts to get the rat away from the litter are deeply resented by the ferret, who treats its foster baby as one of its own.
