DAILY EAST OREGONIAN, PENDLETON, OREGON. WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 13, 1921.

ONE OF TOWN MAKERS TELLS FRED LOCKLEY ABOUT PROCESSES THAT PUT ROUND-UP CITY RIGHT IN MIDDLE OF GREAT BIG MAP

Leon Cohen arrived in Pendleton April 9, 1884. He came as bookkeeper for Lehman Blum. After two years Mr. Cohen and another clerk in the store, Mr. Falk, bought the store. At that time the store was where the Inland Empire Savings bank is now located.

"Pendleton 35 years ago was a pretty lively town," said Mr. Cohen; "lively not only in a business way but in other ways as well. Cowboys, sheepmen and miners would come in, after months in the open, to paint the town red and spend the savings of months in a few days of nights. Hank Vaughan at that time was very much in evidence. He had a playful habit of riding into the saloons on horseback and shooting things up. He rather gloried in his reputation as a bad man."

Starts People's Warehouse

"When I started the People's Warehouse I started with very small capital. We made two rules—one, never to change a price, the other to sell for cash. One day Hank Vaughan came into our store and wanted to buy a suit of gray serge. He was particularly attracted by a gray Prince Albert coat we had in the window. It fitted him, so he said he would take it. He told me to charge it to him. I told him that we did a cash business and that I would hold it for him if he liked. He had the money. A few nights after this Judge Dalley and I were playing billiards in the Willard hotel. Hank Vaughan came in. Seeing me, he gave me an ugly look, and said, 'The drinks are on me; come on up to the bar, boys. I'll pay for the drinks for everyone except him,' he added, as he pointed to me. I knew if I let this insult go by I would lose my standing in the town, so when they had had their drink on Hank I said, 'And now the drinks are on me. Come on up to the bar, boys. I'll pay for everyone's drink except his,' and I pointed at Hank. The worst of it was that a Chinaman had just come in and I invited him up also while Hank stood seething by the bar undecided just what he ought to do."

Hank Has Courage

"Hank did not lack for courage, for one time he and Charlie Long arranged to settle their differences by shooting it out across a table in a saloon. Each of them slid under the table with three or four bullet holes through his body. Strangely enough, neither died from his wounds. Hank once went into the office of L. B. Cox, a prominent lawyer of Pendleton, and made a most insulting remark to Mr. Cox. Before Hank could reach for his gun Cox caught him by the throat, backed him into a corner and threatened to kill him if he didn't take back the remark. Hank decided that discretion was the better part of valor, and apologized. Once when he had been drinking he was racing his horse down Main street. The horse stumbled and fell, throwing Hank heavily and fracturing his skull. Hank lived only a short time. As he was being carried into a nearby hotel he said, 'Somebody pull off my boots. Everyone has always said I would die with my boots on and I am going to fool them.' He died a few minutes later.

Pendleton Lively Town

"Although Pendleton was a lively town in that way, it was then, as it is now, a wide awake and lively town in a business way. The citizens, then as now, worked together for the good of the city. We wanted to capture the trade from the country south of us, and to do so we realized that it would be necessary to get a road over which freight could be hauled. Judge Pee, Sam Sturgis and Sam Jackson were the prime movers in an effort to secure money for this road. We finally got $12,000 from the legislature and with this sum we were able to locate a road from Pendleton south through Pilot Rock, Alba, Ukiah and on to Long Creek. This opened up a large trading territory. We also improved the roads from Pendleton up the Wild Horse to Centerville, which brought us the trade of the farmers in that end of the county. The East Oregonian led the movement to secure a wool scouring mill for Pendleton, which proved a big factor in the growth of the city.

Chamber of Commerce Organized

"In about 1892 boards of trade and chambers of commerce were being established all over the West. On February 9, 1892, Jesse Palling and I issued a call to the business men of the city to meet in the city council rooms to organize a commercial association. T. F. Bourke, one of the leading bankers, was made temporary chairman and I was chosen temporary secretary. Tom Taylor, Jesse Palling and E. B. Gould were appointed to arrange for a permanent organization. On February 16, 1892, we met again. The report of this organization committee was adopted and the commercial association was organized, with the following

Eye on the Ball, Prince!

The Prince of Wales puts up a strenuous game of tennis. He is here shown on the courts of the estate of Lord Denborough. Notice where he is looking—not at the ball!

Buy a pipe—and some P.A.

Get the joy that's due you!

We print it right here that if you don't know the "feel" and the friendship of a joy's jimmy pipe—GO GET ONE! And—get some Prince Albert and bang a howdy-do on the big smoke-gong!

For, Prince Albert's quality—flavor—coolness—fragrance—is in a class of its own! You never tasted such tobacco! Why—figure out what it alone means to your tongue and temper when we tell you that Prince Albert can't bite, can't parch! Our exclusive patented process fixes that!

Prince Albert is a revelation in a makin's cigarette! My, but how that delightful flavor makes a dent! And, how it does answer that hankering! Prince Albert rolls easy and stays put because it is crimped cut. And, say—oh, go on and get the papers or a pipe! Do it right now!

Prince Albert is sold in top red bags, the red lines, handsome pound and half pound tin humidors and in the round crystal glass humidors with sponge moistener top.
