RUSSIAN REFUGEES ARE FACING STARVATION

By COL. ROBERT E. OLDS, Of St. Paul, Minn., American Red Cross Commander of Europe.

(Written for the United Press) PARIS, (By Mail).—For some time the Russian refugee situation in Eastern Europe has been going from bad to worse. It is far and away the most baffling and stubborn problem of the kind which the war has left behind. Every hope of solution has failed and every plan has gone wrong. The Russian refugee crisis grows more terrible as the days and weeks pass. The Russian refugee is unique in this, that he is literally a man without a country. There is no state to which he owes allegiance, no government to which he can look for favor or protection. His legal status is not merely undefined—it is a nullity. The degree of helplessness to which he has been reduced is, for all practical purposes, zero. Nothing quite like it has ever been known before.

During more than two years' experience with these people, I have been deeply impressed by their sincere and heroic efforts to help themselves and by the absolutely intolerable conditions which have defeted them at every turn.

We have thought that the solution of the problem might be brought about through the process of gradual absorption. To a very slight extent only has this happened. The reason is that European nations, under existing circumstances, have taken up extraneous elements everywhere to the point of saturation.

The case is quite evidently one of bold and exceptional treatment on a large scale. All measures which have been taken have been confessedly temporary; their justification has been the belief that in some unexplainable way the situation would solve itself. It has been like having faith in miracles. American relief has played a large part. Our presence as an active factor in the situation during the past winter held these things together and prevented a disaster of capital proportions. I should say that American aid saved at the very least an estimated 100,000 lives. It is hard to convey an adequate conception of the state of chaos which has prevailed in Europe in regard to the Russian refugee problem. Because of the peculiar lack of status of the Russian refugee, nobody accepts a primary responsibility for him. Appeals

A Story of the Passing of the Old West

It is a book which makes an appeal to every American, young and old. In addition to its remarkable illustrations taken from real life, it has a set of thirty-four fascinating little essays; a set of three tables giving for the first time information regarding records of riders and buckers, carefully compiled from the official records of the Round-Up.

This book is a classic of its kind and one of the outstanding books of the year. It is a beautiful satisfying, and any-day-in-the-year gift for every lover of American life, history, adventure and sport. To those who know the Round-Up and the Northwest, it is a permanent and delightful souvenir.

fly about from one relief organization another and each does its bit, but nothing important happens except the unfortunate refugee keeps right on dying. This sort of thing has been going on for more than two years and... Not go on for another two years or until the refugees are all dead, unless the world comes to a realization of the magnitude of the task and takes it up in earnest.

It is now four years since these successive waves of refugees began to roll out from European Russia. They came first after the revolution of May 1917, then after the second revolution in November of that year, and they have kept coming at irregular intervals ever since.

Nobody knows with certainty how many men, women and children have left Russia in fear and panic and are now living in want and destitution, without friends or country. The figures compiled by the state department in January, 1921, gave an aggregate of more than two million. Since then there has been the Kronstadt migration into Finland, and there is always a steady filtration across the borders of Soviet Russia, adding an unknown number. Twenty-eight European countries have groups of these refugees within their borders. The situation, as it exists today, is undoubtedly an international responsibility for governments to meet. Public opinion can help by demanding that they meet it promptly and adequately. All that we can hope to do is simply to convey an adequate idea of the imminent seriousness of the situation. There is a great catastrophe impending.

Two winters ago, three hundred thousand prisoners of war died in Siberia because governments could not, or would not, move to save them. Siberia is a long way off and the death of those men made, after all, little stir in the world. But the impending Russian refugee disaster is going to happen in the very center of civilized Europe, and it cannot be overlooked or forgotten.

MINISTER ASKS SALARY CUT.

WORCESTER, Mass., July 29.—(U. N. S.)—Rev. Ellsworth W. Phillips, pastor of the Memorial Church, Summer street, has requested a salary reduction. Rev. Mr. Phillips declared that he has noted that members of his parish have been compelled to accept wage cuts of from 10 to 20 per cent, and therefore he believes it is only fair for him to stand by his congregation. "I believe in a fair day's pay for a fair day's work," declared Mr. Phillips. "My work during the summer months is much easier than during the winter months."

BRITISH LORD'S STAY AT EMBASSY IS SHORT

WASHINGTON, July 29.—(U. P.)—Following a sudden cancellation of a dinner in honor of Lord Northcliffe, the impression is conveyed that the famous British publisher is being disciplined by Lloyd George and Lord Curzon, as a result of attacks of the Northcliffe publications made on the English leaders. Northcliffe's stay at the British embassy was cut short by Ambassador Geddes announcing he could not house Northcliffe. Also Geddes is believed to have been ordered not to introduce Northcliffe to President Harding. The English publisher, however, had a personal invitation and spent an hour and a half with the president.

DIDN'T KNOW HIS BROTHER

"My brother got so bad with stomach and liver trouble that when I saw him after a year I didn't know him. He was emaciated and yellow as a pumpkin and was often in great pain. He couldn't have lived long the way he was going. Doctors and medicine gave him no relief. I picked up a little booklet on May's Wonderful Remedy, which he said described his case perfectly. The first dose of it gave him great relief and in a month he was good as ever." It is a simple, harmless preparation that removes the catarrhal mucus from the intestinal tract and allays the inflammation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. One dose will convince or money refunded.—Druggists everywhere.
