FIRST WHITE WOMAN TO EXPLORE ROCKIES DIES

BY MICHAEL F. DACEY
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

DENVER, Aug. 18.—Mrs. Clemency McElroy, believed to have been the first white woman to explore the Colorado Rockies, is dead at her home in Arvada, Col., near here, at the age of eighty-six.

Mrs. McElroy, who was one of the most picturesque characters that ever blazed the trail through the wilderness, endured many privations and hardships in the early days of the present Centennial State.

The quaint old lady, who for the last twenty years has been seen in the old-fashioned garden of her Arvada home, making a large black cigar and carrying a heavy cane on her arm, was the subject for many a thrilling tale told by the pioneer folks of the village.

Lured by the promise of gold in the mountains, Mrs. McElroy and her husband, equipped with ox teams, started the journey West from their Indiana home soon after their marriage in 1834. Traveling slowly and encountering innumerable dangers that made long stops necessary, they reached Golden in May, 1839.

Five years of travel in prairie schooners and on horseback earned the sturdy feminine pioneer a suffering, and, while other women remained in the village at Golden while their husbands sought for the golden dust in the mountains, Mrs. McElroy disdained the dangers and joined her mate in the rugged hills, at that time peopled with Indians and wild beasts, in their search for the precious metal.

A year of prospecting in the vicinity of Golden failed to bring riches to the Mellroys and they journeyed to Montana. Here they also met with disappointment and returned to Golden, where they purchased land and engaged in farming.

Having no children, the couple developed a love of botany and according to local tradition, hevered very little with worldly affairs, veritably burying themselves in their small rural home. About twenty years ago the couple moved into the village of Arvada and for a decade were familiarly known to every boy and girl in the village as “Uncle Mac” and “Auntie Mac”. The pair were famed among the youth for their wonderful tales of animal and plant life and the history of the State's infancy.

Mrs. McElroy was born in French Lake, Orange County, Indiana, and numbered among her ancestors many men and women distinguished in the history of the country, especially in the South. Since the death of her husband, ten years ago, she has led the life of a recluse, a pipe or cigar and the heavy cane being but two of her numerous eccentricities.

Mrs. McElroy was buried in Crown Hill Cemetery, in Denver.
