LIFE WITHOUT DEATH IS NOT DESIRABLE SAYS NOTED BIOLOGIST

Professor Says Human Span Might be Lengthened But It Would be Madness.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, Aug. 22. (C. N. S.)—"Life without death is not desirable."

and anthropologist, on a subject which has engaged the deep interest of mankind throughout the ages. Sir Arthur Keith, who attended the meeting of the British Medical Association at Newcastle discussed with an International News Service correspondent the remarkable experiment made by Dr. Alexis Carrel, the famous French-American scientist, with a fragment of a chicken's heart. This fragment, kept in a special culture at Rockefeller Institute since January 17, 1912, has never ceased to grow normally or to give signs of immortality. While Sir Arthur Keith draws the conclusion that immortality is not desirable, he adds another equally desirable. "Life without death is not desirable."

"Eternal life is not impossible; nothing is impossible." "Dr. Carrel, who is French by birth, went to the United States as a young man. There is no pretence or humbug about his work and it is to be taken seriously." "Proving Eternal Life." "He has taken a little patch of the young beating heart of a chick in the egg, and he has by special culture kept it supplied with jelly, and has kept it alive for nine years. This is a new fact, but it is not to be taken as proving that eternal life would be possible for great collections of cells such as go to make up a human being. "We hope some day to know what life is, but at present we are so entirely ignorant of the mechanism of the machinery of life that we cannot say, if you make a motor-bicycle you understand its capacity because you understand its machinery."

"But would eternal life be desirable? I think I can show you that it would not." "The desire for the extension of the span of human life is a form of madness, and if people would only think of the conditions of life they would never entertain the idea. Old age is not a disease, but part of the essential machinery of nature for running human life." "Look on nature, as the business manager of human life. What nature requires is to keep life going. Nature aims at the species; not at the individual. Nature has built our bodies in such a way that we should have short lives. The whole system is built up on a period of short existences. "Up Against Nature." "In trying to extend the span of life you are right up against nature's basic

law. Her whole idea is to use young and vigorous lives and kill off the old. "Civilization has tended to extend the span of human life. Animals like the gorilla and anthropoid apes that are the nearest to man are old at forty. The aborigines of Australia and Patagonia were old men and women at sixty. Human life is longer now, and in saying that I am not speaking of the average person, but of the men and women who overcome all the accidents which include the disease of life and who reach old age. "Past experiences point to the fact that life might be extended by at least another decade. But is it desirable? "What we want now is young, healthy people. What we need is to extend the period of their vigorous life. This necessity is now being generally recognized, and it is the rational view.

"I will give you two smiles which I think will appeal to the general public. "Regard life as a restaurant and nature as the manager. People rush in at midday to lunch. It is crowded; there are no seats. Why? Because some people who have finished their dinner are loitering about and occupying the seats. "Must Limit Them." "The manager says: 'I must make regulations. I must limit them to half an hour to make room for the others.' Nature in the same way has put a limit on the life of man. "Another smile: You know the principle of the continuous performance at the cinema. You pay your money and see the show round. You are then supposed to come out, but some will stay.

"The second time you see the show you will be bored; the third time you will go mad, and the fourth time you may commit suicide. "Human life is something like that. People crave for human immortality. They have never thought what it means." "The natives of the Congo region in Africa use salt of potassium instead of salt of sodium for seasoning their food. This salt they obtain from the ashes of certain plants, and they regard the ordinary imported salt as inferior, buying it only because it is cheaper than the native product. It takes just six hours to convert a growing forest tree into a paper printed and sold on the streets.
