"Pendleton has something doing all the time," declared Estey R. Farley, automobile dealer of the Round-Up city, who was among the eastern Oregon visitors at the Imperial yesterday. "The regular daily murder is reported, either a Chinaman or a cowboy furnishing the victims, which all goes to show that there is still plenty of excitement there to keep everyone on edge." Mr. Farley is a former University of Oregon student and was attending that institution before he went to France with the 41st division, where he spent nearly two years, most of which time he was a pilot in an aviation plane, and he says he prefers that to sitting behind the wheel of his Studebaker.—Oregonian.

LEGION MEMBERS WILL OUST BUMS FROM PARK

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 24.—(I. N. S.)—Due to increasing hoodlumism in the city's public parks, American Legion members promise to dig a "clean-up and kick-out" campaign for the purpose of clearing the parks and making them safe for women and children.

In three cases recently reported to the police women were victims of disorderly men in the parks. "It is outrageous that our beautiful parks should be infested with human scum," declared Municipal Court Judge William D. Alexander.

"The parks belong to the people and should be as safe and as sacred as a householder's front lawn. The hoodlum element must be driven out of the parks," continued Judge Alexander. "Former soldiers have not forgotten the chivalry of the profession of arms. We will be glad to rid the parks of the undesirable," said Joseph Woesten, overseas veteran and municipal police court prosecutor.

WHITE HOUSE CONTAINS RARE WORK OF ART

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—(I. N. S.)—Mrs. Harding, as White House chatelaine, inherits a collection of pictures and paintings of vast historical interest, but one in particular is without equal anywhere in the world. Many who have seen it agree that it is without its equal. It hangs on the wall of Mrs. Harding's parlor, and its unique quality is now apparent to any except the profound historian and student. It is a portrait of Martha Washington, wife of the first president. Under it is inscribed "Mrs. George Washington." Therein lies its distinction. It is the only known instance, to many students, of Martha Washington being referred to as "Mrs. George."

ed outside of the cabin over some other cause than has so far been attributed as the motive for the shooting carries weight. Many of his friends and neighbors declare that he was a quiet man little given to loud talking and that he was not of a quarrelsome disposition and they place little credence in the stories told by George M. Shields and Charles Runyon at the inquest to the effect that Ragains was in the cabin for half an hour talking abusively to Brun. Inquest Friday Morning.
The coroner's inquest, which was continued Monday afternoon until Jim Roach's appearance as the other witness could be secured, will be held Friday morning at 10 o'clock. Roach was present at the former session, and he has failed to come down. The sheriff will subpoena him in person, however, and he is expected to be present Friday. The only excuse advanced for his failure to testify Monday is that he was under the impression he would not get his mileage as a witness unless he was formally subpoenaed. He is said to have left the Wright cabin early in the evening in company with Ragains after the latter had been discharged by Brun. The two daughters of Lou's Ragains are 12 and 15 years old, and not 21 and 25 as was stated yesterday through a typographical error.

PENDLETON WOMAN IS NOW REJOICING

Miss Davidson Says She Could Just Shut for Joy Over Restoration to Health.

"When I realize what this wonderful Taniae has done for me I could just shout for joy," said Mrs. Minda Davidson, 514 Market St., Pendleton, Oregon. "I had an awful attack of the flu two years ago, and it left me almost as weak and helpless as a baby. I had no appetite and ate barely enough to keep body and soul together and was so weak I couldn't even sweep the floor of my room. I was on a nervous tension all the time and finally got so I could hardly close my eyes at night and in the morning felt worn out and miserable. I suffered so much from neuralgia in the face that I would almost go distracted at times. "In a short time after I began taking Taniae I was feeling like a different person. I have a splendid appetite now, sleep all night long without waking once and get up in the morning feeling fresh and happy. I never have neuralgia and, in fact, am just in perfect health. I know a medicine that could help me in the awful condition I was in can help anybody else and I just wish I could put a bottle of Taniae in the hands of every sick man, woman and child." Taniae is sold in Pendleton by Thompson's Drug Store and by all leading druggists everywhere.

FRENCH SEE MASTERY OF MEDITERRANEAN BY DIGGING GREAT CANAL

Scheme Would Nullify Gibraltar Aiding Independent Naval Policy Says Expert.

BY HARRY L. ROGERS, International News Service Staff Correspondent.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 24.—A deep-sea canal, connecting the Atlantic ocean with the Mediterranean Sea, is the latest solution offered by French naval experts of the problem of a new naval policy for France, according to advices just received here from Paris. This waterway would link Bordeaux with the Mediterranean and would be navigable for the largest battleships. As the Kiel Canal gave the Kaiser control of the Baltic, notwithstanding the best efforts of the British fleet, French naval experts believe this "Canal des Deux-Mers," or canal of the two seas, would give France the mastery of the Mediterranean, nullifying the boasted impregnability of the defenses of Gibraltar. Heretofore France has maintained an ample fleet in the Mediterranean depending upon Great Britain to protect her coasts on the Atlantic and the channel.

Being Now Naval Policy.

With the Fordeux canal in operation, it is argued, France would be able to pursue a naval policy independently of Great Britain. By maintaining a fleet of moderate size she could protect both the Atlantic coast and the Mediterranean, as the canal would permit rapid and easy movement of ships from one base to another.

What is believed to be a characteristic view among French naval experts is expressed by a writer in the official organ of the French marine. In discussing the question of a French naval policy, he says:

"Let us examine first our naval policy as it existed in the years which preceded the war. That policy was based upon the 'Entente Cordiale.' Under it we kept in the Mediterranean a fleet of sufficient power to assure us of supremacy. Great Britain was charged with the protection of our coasts on the Atlantic and the ocean. 'We Remain at Mercy.' "Should France in 1921 continue that policy, giving over entirely to Great Britain the duty of protecting the greater part of our coast? That would mean that we shall remain at the mercy of any change in the political alignment of our allies. "Ought we then to have as the Americans have, a fleet in the Atlantic and another in the Pacific, a fleet in the ocean and another fleet in the Mediterranean? That would be very costly."

"It would seem rather that the time has come for the construction of the famous canal of the Two Seas which would link Bordeaux with the Mediterranean. "This canal would cost two or three billions of francs. Aside from its military importance, it would constitute a channel of communication of the first order, and its traffic would be almost as important as that of the Suez Canal. In case of war it would permit of rapid concentration of our sea forces, such as Napoleon never dreamed of."

"Ought to Undertake This."

"France ought to undertake this great work. Throughout the world the nations are debating as to what types of war vessels should be built, without reaching a satisfactory agreement. They fear to expend some hundreds of millions for warships which may become obsolete before they are completed. "The canal of the Two Seas, provided that it is made large enough and deep enough, will remain after ten years after twenty years, an instrument of unequalled military value, even as the Kiel Canal, twenty years after its completion enabled the German squadrons to control the Baltic. "This great undertaking should not frighten the country which gave birth to Ferdinand de Lesseps. Let us construct the Canal of the Two Seas."

Prices Mean Nothing

Without doubt others can sell at a lower price—if you are buying "prices" instead of merchandise.

So could we if we wished to lower the standard of our merchandise. But we insist on quality first—then mark it at a fair price.

On quality jewelry no one can sell for less than we do and remain in business. A comparison is always welcomed.
