SQUIRE EDGEGATE—Surely the Witness Does Not Think Squire Has a Block Head

BY LOUIS RICHARD

LITTLE CONVENIENCES

BEDTIME PENCIL PICTURES

SINCE Merton Buckley has been wearing long pants, he thinks he's old enough to go to the pool room. However, Mr. Buckley caught his share last week and chased him home. Mr. Buckley then told Merton to spend his idle hours reading—thereafter. This advice is good for all and when you've pencilled in the dots you'll know how Merton spends his spare time now.

PAST AND PRESENT

The Child Dwellers.
New York City is inhabited by just two sorts of people—those who live above you and make a racket, and those who live below and unjustly accuse you of doing it.

Some Frame-Up.
Felix—Are the pictures in the rogues' gallery framed?
Eyebad—Yes, in "Guilt!"

Waggles—Say, Tatters, we's got to protest again' dese doctors prescribin' so much iron fer dere patients.
Tatters—What-fer?
Waggles—Cause it makes dem too hard-headed.

PAST AND PRESENT

What's the matter with the fellow who took a bath on Saturday night by the kitchen stove?

And what's going to become of the fellow who takes a cold shower every morning before breakfast?

High-Priced Publicity.
Stanzer—I'd like to know how to get this poem published. I've sent it to a dozen editors, but its of no use.
Carper—You might put it in an envelope, leave it on your table and then commit suicide. All the papers would have it next day.

PAST AND PRESENT

Combustibles.
Rastus (after a visit to the doctor)—this poem published. I've sent it to a dozen editors, but its of no use.
His Wife—How come?
Rastus—Made me swallow two cartridges filled with powder, and then commit suicide. All the papers would tell me I shouldn't smoke. As if Ah would.
