"SPARE THE ROD AND SAVE THE CHILD" FINDS SUPPORT FROM MANY AUTHORITIES

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—"If he was mine you bet I would give him a good whipping!" "I'll tell your father when he comes home tonight—you just wait and see. He'll thrash the life out of you!" "Have you got enough or shall I give you some more until you are sorry?" If the partitions that enclose us have ears, then the above sentences have often awoke the ear-drums of woodshed and nursery walls. But has a whipping ever done anyone real good. Flatter the egotistical mind of a child who feels chastisement to be not only the inflicting of physical pain, but also the power of might over what, to him, seems right. The many mothers and fathers out-of sorts themselves, and intensely irritated at the demands or the depreciations of a restless and mischievous child, resort to severe corporal punishment as a sure way of getting results, if only temporary. In France there is a movement now to check this habit of parents. Fighting "someone not your size" has ever been held a despicable trick. Dr. Toulouse, well known physician of France, will appeal to his country to make illegal this type of parental reprisal. Justice Samuel D. Levy, of the Children's court, of New York city, an acknowledged authority on child psychology, has given his opinion on the action of the French physician and on the subject of whipping in general. He

"Dr. Toulouse is opposed to the rod as a persuasive instrument to compel a child to do right or to prevent a child from being incorrigible or ungovernable children to be 'good,' or as a means toward reformation. "I am told he is preparing to appeal to the Chamber of Deputies of France for a revision and repeal of the law which gives parents right and authority to discipline a child by corporal punishment. "As you know, in this state, corporal punishment is not permitted in the public schools under express statute. "There is no such statute, however, pertaining to parents. "A parent has the right in New York under the decisions to inflict corporal punishment upon his or her child, but such punishment must be fair, reasonable, not excessive or brutal. "If brutal, he or she must answer to the state as in case of assault and may be fined or imprisoned or both, depending upon the severity of the offense. "This subject has been much dis-conclusion that corporal punishment is not only allowable, but that it is the only way to treat some incorrigible children. Among the divers sentences for incorrigibility and delinquency of juveniles 'birching,' as it is called, is doled out as part of the therapy toward disciplining such disorderly or ungovernable children. "Personally, I do not believe a 'birching' ever did any real good or made the bad boy good. I rather believe that those boys or girls who have acted so badly that an English magistrate finds it necessary to sentence them to a 'birching' are not the ones to benefit by chastisement. "On the contrary, those children will thereafter go about with an anti-social grudge that will make of them criminals in time. "Indeed, I cannot conceive of the picture, so brutal, in fact, of the man whose occupation is that of the 'court bircher,' nor of the groaning, writhing child who has the twenty or thirty lashes inflicted, sometimes until the blood spurts from its tender skin nor of the people present who can of deep pity. "Can anyone look upon such a state of affairs and feel that justice is being done? Or the law vindicated? "The whole proposition is to me inconceivable and amacks of the days of the pillory and the stocks. "Recently the sheriff of the county went on record as saying that he will endeavor to have a bill passed this winter abolishing the death penalty for murder; and in its place to have substituted a life sentence, without pardoning grace, except upon proof that the verdict is erroneous. This is as it should be. "The death penalty never stayed the hand of any murderer, and in many states where the death penalty has been abolished less murders have been the rule. "The death penalty is the severest form of corporal punishment and has been a failure wherever practiced. "In New York state murders have increased under the death penalty. A young man under the form of law was put to death a few days ago. He protested his innocence in the very last

"And I am not so sure, but that time will prove his innocence. It has happened before, and such errors, especially when founded upon circumstantial evidence, are beyond recall. "I speak of this as indicating that we have not advanced much since medieval days. 'Birching' and death penalties are relics of those ages. "Many Children Not Responsible. "But a much more important question arises when we stop to consider the children who are 'birched.' "First, are these the usual youngsters of the land or are they the subnormal, the defective, the feeble-minded, the imbecile or the ungraded children? "Surely those persons in authority, like magistrates, psychiatrists and teachers (particularly those of ungraded children) know only too well that the juveniles who commit the acts calling for punishment are, in a great majority of cases, persons of low mentality; usually those having an intelligence quota of from 40 to 65 percent. Above all others those who are admittedly far below par mentally are at punishment should be inflicted. "That they should be corrected in a proper disciplinary institution I have no doubt unless they are such low morons or defectives that they should be sent to Letchwood Village (a home for feeble minded) or to Randall's Island, or such excellent institutions as the Catholic Protective, the Jewish Protective, or the Children's Village of the House of Refuge. These homes are amply able to deal with them. But whipping makes reformation more impossible than any act committed by the child. "This is not the way to make children better. "Reformation and redemption are the order of the day—not infliction. "Probation, sympathy and love will do more to make a child 'good' than all the whippings that were ever administered from the dawn of time. "You rarely see a child that will not respond to kindness, to friendly advice, to sympathetic supervision and to loving guardianship. "Where this form of treatment does
