FAN TAN IS SUPREME RULER ON BIG BOATS
 BY EDNA LEE BOOKER
 (International News Service Staff Correspondent.)

Like a Real One

 An improved artificial arm which enables the wearer to write as soon as he is accustomed to it was one of the most interesting exhibits at the recent London medical exhibition.

MID OCEAN, Oct. 21—Spinning the little wicker roulette top with its fiddle "take all" at Los Angeles tea parties; playing the races in Mexico; buying tickets on the Chinese lottery in Shanghai; breaking the bank at Monte Carlo and "shootin' craps" down in Dixie are fascinating, but—
 Fan tan is the game of chance which rules supreme on the big ocean liners sailing from San Francisco to Hong Kong.
 Men of all nationalities, of all ranks of life, of many creeds and languages meet on an equal footing around the fan tan tables for the little lady of fan tan plays no favorites. She smiles, laughs at, smiles upon and favors the rich, the poor, the brown or the white, the high or the low according to her whim and fancy.
Tables Are Busy
 From early morning until long after midnight the fan tan tables down the narrow stairs from the main deck to the steerage to play the game. Debutantes in smart sport costumes, social leaders from the world's famous watering places, business men, professional gamblers, school teachers on a long-dreamed-of vacation, business girls going out to accept positions with large firms in the Far East, young men hoping to make their fortunes in the Orient, the idle rich tourist on a trip around the world, all yield to the lure of fan tan.

Buttons Tell Tale
 The players place their money on the numbers in the center of the table which run from one to four. A second Chinese, keeper of the money till, makes a noise like someone in pain, then the Cantonese counts the buttons in groups of four. At the end of the count the number of buttons left wins. If two buttons are extra the men placing money on number two win and receive three times the amount placed. If one button is left No. 1 wins and so on game after game.
 Hundreds of dollars are won during the trip and hundreds lost. Often young men gamble away their expense money and arrive in a strange port with just enough change to pay their boat tips, while seamen lose or "strip" their wages for the trip. According to an Indian of high caste who was educated in Europe and America and who is a devotee of fan tan, the man with the long purse will win in the end, for he can play until he regains his losses, but the man with the short purse should resist the call of the capricious lady of fan tan as he would the luring song of the heartless Circe of old.

Yellow faces, impressive and expressionless; unshaven Russian faces, eager and tense; East Indian faces, alert and earnest; tourist faces, patronizing and watchful, bend over the table.
 A Cantonese wearing an American-made straw hat and smoking a long pipe brass Chinese water pipe sits at the end of the table. He rubs his slim ring hand with its tobacco-stained and long nails through a great pile of white buttons. Just plain white—the kind that keep coming out of Willie's shirt. But it is this pile of white buttons which wins or loses hundreds or even thousands of dollars on a long ocean trip and
