n "God's Cruicible." the picturization of Ralph Connor's novel, "The Por-eigner," which is released beneath the Hodkinson banner, takes place in a cave where the hero—admirably played by Gaston Glass,—discovers coa and thereby attains to the financial in dependence which makes it possible for him to sue for the hand of the beautiful Gladys Coburn. This scene is exactly as the author described it when he wrote the story and is an absolutely true version of the exact way in which coal was discovered in the famous antharcite mines in Can

When the scene was being filmed,in fact when all the mine scenes wer being filmed,—the officials of the company who were desirous of helping to the limit of their powers, showed their anxiety to cooperate by declaring a half holiday in the mine so that Director Mackae and his company of players could work unhindered. They vent even further by offering the services of the miners employed who en tered into the spirit of the thing so admirably that the scenes in "God's Cruicible" which show the coal min in full blast are marvelous of technical perfection.

"God's Cruicible" will be shown at the Rivoli Theatre Wednesday only.
