MARRIED WOMEN SHOULD KEEP INFORMED ON ALL PUBLIC INTEREST TOPICS

Housewife Should Not be Indifferent to Politics, Declares Anne Mathews.

By LEO T. HENATLEY
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—To be of the greatest service to her community and her country, the married woman should keep herself informed on questions of public interest and never allow herself to become indifferent to politics.

"This was the opinion of Miss Anne Mathews, democrat elected to the highest salaried political office a woman has ever held in this country. She was the successful candidate in New York county for the office of registrar, a post paying $12,000 a year, the salary of Alice Robertson, congresswoman from Oklahoma, is only $7,500 a year.

Miss Mathews ran on a platform the chief plank of which called for "a business woman for a business job." She will admit no disqualification for political positions, but has no patience with the society diletanti that have invaded the realm of women's politics. "The butterfly woman is useless in politics," she said.

Office Not Picturesque

The office of registrar is not picturesque. Miss Mathews will have jurisdiction over a force of 144 workers, the majority of whom are men. The registrar's office records transactions in real estate records and keeps a file of notices of public auctions.

"I do not propose to change the policies now being followed in the office," she explained.

"Women have the inherent ability which fits them to discharge any public function as well as men can do it. Presently they are handicapped by lack of business experience. Women, since the beginning of time have been keeping the home and raising the children, while men have had unlimited opportunity to engage in civic affairs. A business training is the greatest asset for any public office—man or woman. The person who has been employed understands best how to give the people full value for their money and how to get the greatest quantity and best quality of work from those under him.

Chance for Married Women

"People who are compelled to work especially if they like their vocation, are the ideal public officials. I believe there are great possibilities for the married woman in political office—the woman who has raised children that have gone their way, who retains her youthful enthusiasm, but, after years of isolated domesticity, is out of touch with current events. Many medical men hold that the female brain, under such circumstances, retrogresses beyond recovery. This theory is ridiculous. I can't refute it scientifically, but I know many women who have 'come back' after raising families. Children should be reared in a woman, never creep her. Of course, the mind becomes flabby through disuse, but the married woman's mental sharpness is no greater than that which afflicts anyone after years of mind inertia.

"Married women, though occupied with their homes, should keep abreast of affairs from the moment of the ceremony. Thus they will be of greater service to their children as well as their community."

Miss Mathews was for twenty years a fashion designer and has traveled extensively.

100 MUCH PUNCTATION

POPULAR BLUFF, Mo., Nov. 22.—(C. N. S.)—Here's a hint for you! Ernest Shefer says in his petition for divorce from his wife that Mrs. Shefer "formed the disagreeable habit of too strenuously punctuating her remarks regarding domestic relations," by bringing dishes, boiled potatoes and skillets at him. A rolling pin was not mentioned, but Shefer declares he "draws the line when a woman chunks me with hot potatoes." Divorce was granted.

Harding's Letter

This is Warren Harding Miller, of Brooklyn, and his mother. When President Harding heard about the naming of the child in his honor, he wrote the baby a letter passing the honor back to the Miller family. The president told the child to grow up to be a man worthy of his father, Lieut. Harry Miller of the U. S. Marines.

AMUSEMENTS

NANCE O'NEIL IN "THE PASSION FLOWER"

"The Passion Flower," translated from the great Spanish drama, "La Malquerida," by Jacinto Benavente, Spain's foremost dramatist, and in which remarkable play Miss Nance O'Neil has won the greatest personal triumph of her career, affords to students and lovers of pure drama an unparalleled opportunity for comparison between the Anglo-Saxon and the Latin schools of the drama. In this wonderful play Benavente has permitted his Latin mind to run riot and with an emotional genius like Miss O'Neil to interpret his mood and thought, the spectator is, for the time being, transported to the austere plateau of Castile where elemental passions and primal impulses battle with the conventions of an imposed civilization in the daily lives of its inhabitants. Dr. Luis Larra Parra, dean of the Latin critics in America, says of Miss O'Neil's performance in "La Fronsia," the Spanish daily of New York: "Nance O'Neil truly accomplished wonders in the role of Raimunda. She has approached it with deep affection; more perhaps, than any other role she has ever assumed. La Malquerida affords her unrivaled opportunity for the display of her temperament. She has comprehended—and this is something rare in these days—that La Malquerida is a very realistic work and as such requires an earnestness and sincerity before all other qualities. Neither in Spanish nor in English is the heart of Raimunda to be declared; it must be felt and talked above anything else, it must be felt and expressed by movement, poise and action, yes, even by silence. And it must be further said in praise of Nance O'Neil that she has neglected no detail, she has attended to every criticism, so that she has penetrated more deeply day by day into this character which is one of the most moving in the modern drama. The Spanish Theatre is deeply indebted to her."

Miss O'Neil supported by a fine cast and the original production in its entirety will be seen at the Rivolt Theatre on Saturday Nov. 26 when playgoers of Pendleton will have an opportunity to witness this remarkable play as presented during its extended runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, and the principal cities of the East during the past two seasons.
