Just Folks by Edgar A. Guest

WONDERING

Wander if I washed my face an' hands
 An' brushed my hair
 An' sat right still through supper time
 An' did not touch my coat,
 If Santa Claus would notice it an' be
 So glad he'd say,
 "I guess I'll give him everything he's Asked for Christmas Day."

Wonder if I tried to be as good as I
 Can be
 An' mother didn't have to speak a second time to me
 To get me to come in from play or send me up to bed,
 If Santa Claus would notice it an'
 bring along a sled,

I haven't been so awful good for months an' months, I know,
 I've done a lot I shouldn't do, but couldn't help it though,

"Breaking Up the Fox"

After the hounds have caught the fox, its brush is usually presented to the fairest of the ladies in the hunt. Then the fox is tossed to the hounds, as you see in this picture. This is called "breaking up the fox." This photo was taken at the meet of the New Forest Foxhounds in England.

PAPER MULCH TO AID PINEAPPLE GROWERS

HONOLULU, T. H., Dec. 19.—(U. S. N. S.)—A special paper manufactured from bagasse, or cane pulp, from which sugar has been extracted, is now being experimented with by the pineapple growers of Hawaii, with results which indicate that its use as a mulch on the pineapple fields will not only prevent weed growth, thereby reducing their labor costs, but will increase by about three tons to the acre the production of pineapples.

The pulping process, which was invented by C. E. Eckart, former manager of Oloa plantation, on Hawaii, and on which patents are held, has been used very successfully on the cane fields. The paper mulch is applied in rows before planting, and in the case of pineapples the crowns are planted in holes punched through the layer of paper. The plant is thus free to grow, but weeds cannot readily come up through the mulch, and surface evaporation from the ground is also checked, thus preventing excessive drying or baking of the surface.

THEY NEED THE WESTERN VIEWPOINT

IF the proposed four power treaty is discussed as now seems it will be, this fact will soon be made plain—that from the standpoint of America dealing with Japan we would be much more fortunately situated if in the League of Nations instead of the four power union. The League of Nations plan calls for scrapping no battleships at this time and therefore assures Japan no such favorable naval ratio as the Japs will have under the Hughes treaty. Furthermore, it is admitted even by defenders of the four power treaty that article two of that treaty carries an obligation that this country aid Japan in event of an attack upon Japan or any of the Japanese insular possessions in the Pacific. The obligation would be a moral one, as under article 10 of the league covenant, and might mean much or little, but the obligation such as it is puts Japan in a preferred position because Japanese obligations to America are confined merely to Pacific islands controlled by this nation. In other words this country could not attack Japan without confronting a situation under which the other parties to the treaty, England and France, would be morally obligated on the side of Japan. But the Japanese could if they wished attack the mainland of the United States and face no such predicament. The arrangement is unfair.

Under the League of Nations covenant all member nations are placed in the same category. Under article 10 each member nation is guaranteed that if attacked by an external foe the other members of the league will be morally aligned on the side of the nation attacked, which is a pretty strong assurance against any nation being attacked. So if we were a member of the League of Nations we could deal as we please with Japanese immigration and land ownership in this country, those subjects being of a domestic nature, and Japan could not make war upon us on that account without facing the moral opposition of all other members of the league.

By not going into the League of Nations this country has overlooked a chance to materially improve its strategic position with reference to Japan. If we enter the four power treaty instead of the world league we will sacrifice even more upon this point. A study of the league covenant and of the Pacific union treaty will show this point is well taken and it is a very important matter because our chief worries for the future are in the Pacific rather than in Europe.

Since the Japanese relationship to America figures so strongly in the work of the limitations conference it is too bad the president did not name a strong western man upon the American commission. Western people understand the Japanese issue more clearly than do easterners and they are less liable to be led astray when that point is under consideration.

A REAL INTERNATIONALISM

CLASPING hands here in the shadow of the statue of Dante, Rene Viviani, head of the French delegation to the conference on limitation of armaments, and Carlo Schanzer of the Italian delegation, thus dramatically denied reports of a rupture between France and Italy, says the Washington Herald.

A dramatic and eloquent incident, but not as significant as a statement Viviani made previously when he said: "Dante belongs not to Italy alone, but to the world."

In truth genius is international. Shakespeare is not an English possession—he is a citizen of the world in its truest sense. This is not only true of poetic genius. Einstein's discoveries are not only Germany's, they are the world's. Pasteur's revelations benefited the suffering humanity of all nations.

The most recent illustration of this is Dr. Lorenz's visit to America. The Austrian surgeon is trying to help a small portion of America's deformed to become normal, just as American relief organizations gave their utmost to help save the children of Austria from starvation.

Genius and mercy are international.

The question of financing the Portland fair is not difficult if you look at the matter in a sane light. Let Portland pay for its own fair but have a reasonable appropriation from the legislature for an Oregon building.

In his task of conducting the highway affairs of Oregon Mr. Ottenheimer has run into two difficulties, one named Booth and the other named Barratt.
