Just Folks by Edgar A. Guest

THE PATIENT MAN

He didn't mind the petty cares,
 The little things which make us fret,
 Like frequent climbing of the stairs,
 For books or mother's sewing set;
 The noise the children made at play,
 The costly things their hands destroyed,
 Somehow he seemed to smile away,
 He was not easily annoyed.

The little disappointments came,
 As come they must to all of us,
 But he was never quick to blame
 And never one to make a fuss;
 "What can't be helped," he used to say,
 "A man must bravely try to bear,
 And he will spoil a happy day
 Who whimpers at a little care."

SECURITY MUST COME FIRST

It is easy to understand the French position regarding naval strength if you look at the matter from their viewpoint. France is asked to accept a position of permanent inferiority as far as the sea is concerned, yet the limitations conference offers no guaranty of safety. The French are scarcely to be blamed for their objections. The trouble arises from the fact the conference has made the fundamental mistake of treating the symptoms instead of the cause of the trouble. Armaments exist because the nations feel insecure. Remove that feeling of insecurity and it will be easy to reduce armaments. No nation will desire great fleets or big armies if there is no occasion for them. The Versailles conference saw the situation in its true light and drafted a league covenant that seeks security first and disarmament as a natural subsequent result. The arms conference has seemingly acted on the assumption that it will be possible to eliminate armaments without first removing the danger that causes nations to arm. That is a difficult problem. It is like trying to put a roof on a house before the foundation has been constructed.

HE PUT SERVICE ABOVE SELF

YESTERDAY was the birthday of Woodrow Wilson and he received many deserved messages of congratulation from admiring friends all over the world. He had one from Umatilla county and it was from the hearts of those who sent it. Mr. Wilson is now broken in health, the victim of a battle in which he placed service above self and in which he sought to redeem promises to men who died in the nation's cause. Mr. Wilson is too modest and too sincere to be a good politician but as the leader of our country in war time and as the spokesman of all free nations he accomplished wonders toward the task of victory and justified the men who placed the stars and the colors of heaven upon our flag.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC TRADE

THE government's figures for agricultural exports made public during the week, once more illustrate the tendency of our foreign trade toward reaction, the large majority of all staple commodities being distinctly lower. Thus once more attention is called to the necessity of providing for some means of financing our foreign trade on an effective basis, which will permit the continuous growth of business with foreign countries. Importation, although showing a slight growth, has developed only moderately, suffering from some of the same difficulties which surround the export side of the trade. On the other hand domestic business is now reaching proportions which in many lines approximate the normal. This is shown by the upward movement in the volume of production, and the figures for receipts of staple products at primary markets, as well as for movement of such goods over the railroads. Such improvement may be expected to go much further in lines which thus far have been somewhat retarded, like iron and steel, building materials and the like, but it should be remembered that, in order to keep our greatly expanded plant at work, we must provide for the sale of a substantial percentage of our output in foreign countries. Better agricultural prices are regarded by many as impossible until foreign demand can be encouraged, and in the absence of such better prices we can scarcely expect to see the due banking provision made for a satisfactory maintenance of acreage for the coming crop season. This situation has been carefully discussed by representatives of the most influential banking interests at a recent meeting, and it was there the consensus of opinion that effective action by the banks of the country would be necessary to sustain our agricultural production, thereby giving due support to general demand for manufactures at the close of the coming crop season.—From the Clews Financial Review.

FROM THE PEOPLE

OPPOSES FORESTRY CHANGES

Washington, D. C., Dec. 28.

Editor East Oregonian:

Proposals are being seriously contemplated at the National Capital for changes in handling the national forests which if adopted will be very unsettling and will react against the interests of the West. A revision of the federal work of forestry, now central to the objective. One bill in congress transfers the Alaska forests from the jurisdiction of the forest service to the interior department. Another transfers the forest service as a whole from the agriculture to the interior department. The chairman of the reorganization committee is quoted in the paper as proposing a division of the functions of the forests between the two departments.

Any such change in jurisdiction will involve changes of policy and of administrative plans, and will be very unsettling to those who are using the national forests and their resources. The west must now face the possibility of a new administration in regard to those public properties. Do the 12,000 ranchers and other stockmen who have cattle and sheep on the forest lands to run the gamut of another change? Do the 12,000 purchasers of timber with a new departmental jurisdiction, with the inevitable new viewpoint and new methods?

Any of the proposals mean duplication, increased expense and reduced efficiency. Over half of the forests of the country will in the long run be in small ownership, either attached to farms or interested among farms. The federal functions in advancing the development of these forests must remain with the department of agriculture whose chief objective is the building up of rural communities and industries. A division of governmental activities in forestry is bound to be accompanied by public loss.

As in Alaska, no more thought or disinterested thing could be done than to sever the public forests from the only organization of the government that has the experience and trained personnel to handle them. Such action would involve the building up of a new organization, which would duplicate the work of the present forest service. And this proposal is made at the time when extensive sales of pulpwood are being made that will bring into the forestry new and important industries whose permanence depends on the skill of handling of the forests.

So much is of stake in the way of the national forests to the best interests of the West that experience in departmental jurisdiction will be fraught with grave consequences.

I need this letter to call attention to the situation and to the viewpoint which I have expressed.

Very truly yours,
 HENRY S. GRAVES,
 (Former Chief Forester)

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

ARCADE TODAY

The Arcade Theatre announces the featured attraction beginning today, "The Dwelling Place of Light," a Benjamin B. Hampton production made from the great novel of the same name by Winston Churchill.

"The Dwelling Place of Light" is said to tell a fascinating story of life as it is lived today, dealing among other things, with a theme of universal appeal, the personal freedom of women. It is in no sense of the word a suffering picture, nor does that question play any part. It tells of the experiences of "Jane Butler," played by beautiful "Lorraine Adams" and what her life has been since she left her home in her search for "The Dwelling Place of Light."

It is the fight of Sex against Ambition. One, set apart from man and her place in a greater or a lesser degree, this problem confronted only a comparatively small portion of womanhood. Now over three-quarters of America's young women are "working girls" for education and the wave of "equal rights" movement over the country has made high girls and poor alike go into some organized field to endeavor where they meet men on an equal footing. What effect the modern woman's intimate business relations with men have upon the world-old problem of sex?

This is but one angle of the fascinating story, which is said to contain every known element that goes to make for perfect screen entertainment.

Besides Miss Adams the cast includes Robert McKim, King Parrott, Agate Beech, Lorraine Adams, Lorraine Adams, William Monte, C. R. Murphy, Ogden Corso, Budah Dooler and many other popular players.

DISABLED WAR VETERANS TO RECEIVE CLOTHING

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29.—All disabled veterans of the world war under care in government hospitals and institutions will receive adequate clothing and equipment under a bill favorably reported by the house military affairs committee, which goes on the calendar for a vote in the house when congress reconvenes after the Christmas holidays.

The bill authorizes the secretary of war to co-operate with the superintendent of the United States public health service in distributing army clothing to government patients. Thousands of dollars worth of this surplus war material is now stored away in warehouses.

House leaders have denigrated a special rule for consideration of the measure. Statements were made on the floor that if congress could rush through a bill for $20,000,000 for starving Russians it ought to be able to put through one for cold ex-servicemen.
