DO YOU BELIEVE THIS?
DETROIT, Dec. 29.—"America doesn't need prohibition. In a country that has a climate as stimulating as that of the United States strong drink is never needed to keep up flagging spirits, and the dry law is unnecessary," declared Prof. Robert M. Wenley, of the University of Michigan. "In Ireland, Scotland and England people find themselves depending on the use of drinks that will help them bear up under the depressing effects of the climate," he said. "Therefore they have to drink while Americans do not."

OUR WORLD TODAY
What means the great masses of people. All nations great and small. Warring to lose and to win. Misery and distress to all?

THE WAGE OF THE MIGHTY SIN
Sacred grandeur of many years. Destroyed in a twinkling of an eye. Are the pictures of reality before us today. Today as we pass by.

What means the long bread lines in our cities. No work for our men to do. Homes without food or fuel. High cost of living forcing crime too.

What means the unrest of our people. Wandering over land and sea. Seeking success in all countries. Where ever they happen to be.

Find the key to thy hearts and one language. So all may understand. And all may know the great command. God's will be done.

Join in mighty voices. Call Oh Brothers and Sisters have fear. Lend a helping hand to one another. And fill this world with cheer. Rebuild the stony hearts with good deeds and kindness. For Why? The great reward. Our new world in the sweet by and by. —MRS. W. J. BURNS, Perkins Rooms, Pendleton, Ore.

ONLY FRACTION OF FORD CAR OUTPUT MADE IN DETROIT

Assembling Plants Responsible for Great Number Machines Turned Out by Manufacturer

DETROIT, Dec. 29.—(U. S. S.)—Contrary to general belief, only a fraction of the Ford monthly output comes in the form of finished cars from Detroit plants. Ford's Detroit activity is chiefly the making of parts, which are shipped to thirty-six branches, strategically located over the country. Twenty-two branches are normally assembling stations. Some five or six more may be converted in rush time. Others are essentially parts depots. The Highland Park plant here assembles cars only for this immediate trade territory, having an output of 7,400 in September, against 7,900 for Kearney, 8,000 for Chicago and 8,500 for St. Louis. Production in the Highland Park plant for September was 99,000 cars, that is, parts for that many automobiles were manufactured. These parts were shipped out, assembled and the total output completed by adding the combined American assemblies. In addition, the Highland Park plant produces many parts for the foreign branches and thousands of repair pieces. Four or five cars are also assembled weekly at the River Rouge plant to test the accuracy of parts made there.

It is only by such a system that Ford is enabled to reach his output of nearly 5,000 cars daily. The assembling branches also made possible tremendous savings on freight. Parts, packed tightly in freight cars, are shipped over the country, but the purchaser in Cambridge, for instance, pays freight on the complete car from Detroit, though it was actually assembled in his own city.

For the grand total of Ford monthly production the output of Canadian and overseas branches is added. The American assembling stations turned out approximately 82,000 cars in October. The Canadian plant manufactured an additional 2,050. About an equal number was produced at Manchester, England, largely from parts shipped by Highland Park. Buenos Aires and Copenhagen assembled 2,000 more for a total production of 92,000.

Important assembling stations are located in Kearney, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Cambridge, Philadelphia, Des Moines, San Francisco, Omaha, Pittsburgh, Memphis, Dallas and other cities. Atlanta, Denver, Charlotte and Washington assemble in busy times, while Jacksonville, Spartanburg, Fargo, Salt Lake City and others are parts branches.

The assembling stations pulled the Ford industries through last Winter's financial crisis. Large stocks of finished parts were on hand. The assembling plants were started, the parts converted into cars and then shipped out to dealers.

BOYS, YOUNG AND OLD, ENJOY ROAST DUCK AT CHRISTMAS CHURCH FEED

An opportunity to rub shoulders with their older brothers and to show their ability in the art of eating was afforded a number of the younger boys of the Bible school of the Christian church last night when a group of the young men of the church acted as hosts. The "feed" was unique in that it was prepared by men and served by men. It consisted of roast duck, both wild and tame, with plenty of mashed potatoes and brown gravy and other good things that are in order at a real dinner.

Following the banquet Dan Bowman who presided as toastmaster, introduced a number of speakers who talked on the interests that affect the lives of boys, both young and old. Among the speakers were Rev. W. A. Greenman, Herman DeHart, Harvey McPherson, Charles Gehring and others.

Every article in the store will sustain a sharp and effective cut. Our prices will be shaved to a strictly cash basis. We will close our books for credit to all alike, both good and bad, and in the future our every effort will be to co-operate with the conscientious housewife who knows the value of the dollar, and convince her that there is but one sane way to live and that is to pay as we go along, making every dollar buy as near its true value in merchandise as we possibly can, and to prevent spending them where an appreciable percentage of their value will go to pay up the bad debts of others, the curse of a credit business.
