HOW TO BE GAY AS THE HOW TO BE GAR AS THE RESULT OF WAR HABITS

Goes to Bed at 11; Influence of Defense of Realm Act Continues Despite Repeal.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—(U. N. S.)—This city,

one-time metropolis of the world has forgotten how to be gay. It has lost its capacity for enjoyment. Midnight revels and supper parties are things of the past.

Restaurants and railroads report an extraordinary slump in patronage and declare London has been demoralized, hypnotized and broken-spirited by wartime restrictions. The city now deliberately chooses to go to bed at eleven.

Six years ago the night life of London—its suppers, entertainments and dances—was one of its principal features. From eleven at night to four in the morning was the gayest period of the day. People came from afar for the pleasure of a few nights in the

And then, just six years ago, came the heavy hand of what was known as "Dora," otherwise the Defense of the Realm act. It was made illegal to obtain a drink after nine-thirty. Dancing was practically ruled out entirely after dark. Even restaurants had to shut at ten-thirty. Zeppelins and economy killed London's gay evenings.

Two months ago, after three years of peace, the restrictions were lifted. It is now possible to get a drink in London until twelve-thirty and even up to four in the morning, in places specially favored. Champagne can now be drunk openly instead of out of cups, and it is no longer necessary to carry a pocket flask of whisky. It seemed as though nothing stood in the way of Londoners reverting to their former habits.

At any rate, the restaurants, theatres and dancing places thought so. They laid all their plans for an orgy of enjoyment and expected a big boom. The "tubes," the subways of London, agreed with them and, instead of stopping their service at midnight, ran trains until one-thirty. They had visions of a heavy post-midnight traffic.

All were wrong alike. Londoners had forgotten that there were such things as suppers after the theatres. They could not realize that late trains were permitted or that it was really legal to dance after midnight. The early-to-bed habit had grown too strong.

Regretfully the tubes have had to admit the fact. They have even counted the passengers leaving Piccadilly Circus—the heart of London—on four trains leaving in various directions at 12:50. On one there were twenty-two people, on another thirty-four, on the third thirteen and the fourth eleven. And each of these trains is scheduled to carry 800 people. No wonder that transportation authorities are debating whether late traffic is worth while. Restaurants tell a similar story. At the Savoy Hotel, in 1914, about 850 suppers used to be served nightly. Now the maximum is about 450. The same state of affairs occurs in all the other fashionable hotels and restaurants. Night life is still strange to London. It may be that, under crushing taxation, everyone is hard up. Perhaps war horrors and bureaucratic restrictions have knocked the gaiety out of London's heart. Whatever the cause, London is now a sadder place than many a second-rate provincial city.

AUSTRALIA BUILDING NEW MODEL CAPITAL

MELBOURNE (By Mail to the United Press)—Patterning its government after that of the United States in more than one way, the Commonwealth of Australia upon its formation in 1900, provided that the capital of the federal government should not be located in any state, but in an area similar to the District of Columbia. This area, known as Canberra, however, has failed to assume the proportions of an actual city due to the war, and the buildings are now beginning to spring up.

There can be no private ownership of land in Canberra, the final title residing always in the commonwealth. But provisions are made for the leasing of lots at an annual rental, exclusive of taxes, of not less than 5 per cent of the unimproved value as assessed by the ministry. The land is to be reappraised after the lease has been running for twenty years, and each ten years thereafter. Building operations must begin one year after the granting of the lease and completed twelve months thereafter. All mineral rights are reserved to the crowns. It is expected after the city is completed it will be the model municipality of the world.

Croup

"I have a little girl six years old who has a great deal of trouble with croup. I used Foley's Honey and Tar, giving it to her according to directions, and obtained instant relief for her. My wife and I always use it and will say it is the best cure for croup, a bad cold or throat trouble that I ever used." W. E. Curry, 130 Upper 6th St., Evansville, Ind.

Safe, sure and satisfactory. Best for children and grown persons. No opiates.
