AMERICAN FORCES IN GERMANY URGED TO AID EUROPEAN STABILIZATION

COBLENZ, Jan. 12.—The American Forces in Germany are assisting in every possible way in bringing about the ultimate stabilization of Europe generally, according to recent announcement here. The American detachments on the Rhine are now virtually on a peace time footing, the policy of Major General Henry T. Allen, in command, now as always, being to treat the civilian population with consideration but at the same time maintaining, of course, the dignity and prestige of an army of occupation and of the Inter-Allied Rhineland High Commission.

Outlining the policy of the American Forces to some 400 officers, Colonel W. F. Hay, chief of staff, made it clear that a part of the duties of the army under the present circumstances was to help whenever the opportunity presented itself to create a friendly spirit among the countries of Europe, and in this way carry out the peaceful missions so desired by the majority of the nations of the world.

The policy of General Allen, said Colonel Hay, had always been to deal with the Germans considerately, and at the same time firmly, and he emphasized the importance of each member of the army in conducting himself as to always reflect only credit upon his uniform and his country. The United States as a whole he said, would be judged by Europeans for years to come, long after the American army had gone home, by the officers and enlisted men composing the Rhineland forces at the present time.

Colonel Hay pointed out that his remarks with reference to intercourse between the Americans and Germans had no bearing on the question of social relations, as this, he thought, would probably continue to conduct themselves as heretofore, the relations between the Americans and Germans having been confined chiefly to association only in official capacities.

American officers generally have never associated with the Germans in the three years of occupation, and there has been no attempt on either side to establish social relations. There have been exceptions both ways, but at the present time there is no tendency on the part of American officers nor the better class of Germans to inaugurate ordinary social relations, and each goes his separate way trying to make the best of circumstances unavoidable in an occupied area. Many German families of the upper-class have left Coblenz since the occupation began rather than put up with the inconveniences brought about in the matter of billeting, all of the occupied cities being short of housing and office space and consequently overcrowded.

Colonel David L. Stone, representative of General Allen on the Inter-Allied Rhineland High Commission, also addressed the officers, describing the organization and duties of the Commission and the general effect of American participation in the Rhineland occupation. Colonel Stone said many Americans and Europeans who had visited the area were of the opinion that, because of America's impartiality with regard to European affairs, the mere fact of American forces participating in the occupation and continuing to do so, would have a far-reaching influence upon the progress of stabilization of Central European affairs.

Still greater effect would be shown, Colonel Stone said, as the American forces here displayed in themselves the traditional reputation of the United States for justice and square dealing to all and he urged every American officer to realize this and to impress the fact upon the enlisted men, and that each and every American should do his own individual part in the great work before him. Colonel Stone urged the Americans to post themselves upon European conditions so that upon returning home each could give his friends a clear insight to the actual conditions which confront this part of the world today.

Japs Demand Less of Arms

Gasoline Supplants Steam

This big motor bus carries commuters on the New York, New Haven & Hartford. Three of them are now in operation. Though they resemble the usual gasoline-driven bus in many ways they are equipped with air brakes and other rail devices.

As has often been said by writers and speakers, Colonel Stone said in conclusion, the serious economic situation in Europe affected the entire world and until normal conditions were restored over here there could be no return to normalcy in the United States which depended extensively upon European trade as an outlet to many of its vast industries and that, on this account, as well as for the good of humanity, the Americans generally at home should take an active interest in bringing about the earliest economic rehabilitation of Europe.
